THREE CENTS

Leaders Press Loan Bills to End Session By Saturday

Both Measures in Peril at Start of What May Prove Closing Week

By the Associated Press

The most rebellious Congress of President Roosevelt's years in the White House entered what may be the last week of its seven-month session yesterday with two major Administration bills teetering between success and failure and a variety of others already tumbled by the wayside.

Plans of the leadership called for a steady drive toward adjournment by Saturday, but both the Senate and House had yet to act upon the multi-million-dollar lending program and a contest was in prospect in the House over the $800,000,000 housing bill, already approved by the Senate.

In addition to these, it was possible the House would vote on amending the wage-hour act to exempt various groups of workers, although Senate consideration of that subject this session appeared remote.

Security Revision in Doubt

There was a seemingly slim chance, too, that amendments broadening the scope, liberalizing some of the benefits and revising the tax schedule of the social security act would be cleared by Congress.

Differing House and Senate proposals in this field are before a deadlocked conference committee which meets tomorrow. Among proposals caught in the deadlock is one to postpone for three years the increase now scheduled for January 1 in taxes on employers and employes for the old age pension system.

Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, predicted at the end of Saturday's session that the Senate would vote late today on its $1,640,000,000 version of the lending bill.

Lending Vote to Be Close

Repeatedly, last week, Barkley sought to curtail debate and bring the bill to a vote on passage. But a coalition of Democrats and Republicans, working for its defeat, blocked him at every turn while it trimmed $850,000,000 off loan authorizations asked by the Administration, including $500,000,000 for highways and $350,000,000 for railroad equipment.

Barkley finally obtained an agreement Saturday night providing that no Senator may speak more than 15 minutes on any one amendment or on the bill itself.

Excepting the vote on final passage, which both sides admit will be close, the only highly controversial Senate vote remaining will be on a provision authorizing the Export-Import Bank to finance trade in Latin America to the extent of $100,000,000.

Senator Austin, of Vermont, acting Republican leader, said an effort would be made to trim this to $25,000,000.

CCC Bill Up Today

The House scheduled a routine session for today. Principal item on its program was a measure to give the Civilian Conservation Corps a five-year lease on life.

A $1,950,000,000 version of the lending bill was reported from the House Banking Committee late Saturday, and there was a slim possibility that an effort would be made to call it up in the House tomorrow, although leaders said the housing bill was more likely to be brought up then. The latter measure would double borrowing power of the United States Housing Authority for its slum clearance and new housing program.

Members of the Republican-Democratic coalition in the House predicted they would have the votes to shelve the housing bill after a motion was made that it be considered. The regular Democratic leadership, apparently apprehensive this might occur, passed up opportunities to offer such a motion Friday and again Saturday.

Many persons believed that, if the House bill were shelved tomorrow, the lending measure itself would stand more chance of suffering a similar fate when the House coalition, encouraged by success, had a crack at it.

Reno, Nev., July 30 (AP).—Sally Rand, who also can fly an airplane, today claimed a new San Francisco-Reno speed record for light planes.

Accompanied by E. E. Mouton, former Government aeronautics inspector, the dancer was timed at one hour 54 minutes for the approximately 200 miles.

FHA Slashes Home Interest Rate to 4½%

New Charge Lowest on National Basis in U. S. History, Says McDonald

The Federal Housing Administration in a move expected greatly to stimulate home buying and construction, yesterday announced reductions in cost of home financing which it insures.

It reduced from 5 to 4½ per cent the interest rate on small home mortgages and cut from 4½ to 4 per cent the rate on mortgages on large-scale rental projects.

Administrator Stewart McDonald announced notices were being sent to 12,000 banks, savings, building and loan associations and other private lending institutions advising them of the new maximum rates.

Lowest Rate Ever Offered

At the same time, Jesse Jones, Federal loan administrator, advised McDonald that the Federal National Mortgage Association and the RFC Mortgage Co. would buy FHA-insured mortgages at the reduced rate at par and accrued interest from lending institutions, and continue the usual allowance for servicing.

Pointing out that the new rates constitute "the most favorable terms ever available to home buyers on a Nation-wide basis in the history of the country," McDonald said:

"The reduction in interest rates extends to the home-buying public the benefits of generally lower interest rates now prevailing in the money market. With these reductions, small homes can be purchased on terms as low as 10 per cent down and average monthly payments of $5.81 per $1,000 borrowed, including principal, interest and mortgage insurance premium. Thus, monthly payments averaging $23.25, or 77 cents a day, over the period of the loan will completely pay off a $4,000 mortgage in 25 years."

He said the interest rate on rental property mortgages "should enable a greater advance to be

Husband Kills Wife, Self in Tiff On Where to Live

Riverside, N. J., July 30 (AP).—After 17 years in America, 66-year-old Anna Littman argued it was time to go back to Germany.

"No," said her husband, Arthur, 64.

Police said Littman bashed in his wife's head with a blackjack and then fired three pistol bullets through her neck and one through his own head.

Canoes Upset, 6,500 Drenched By Downpour

Rain that poured in torrents on downtown Washington for 20 minutes last night drenched 6,500 music lovers at the Watergate, sent thousands on the streets scurrying for shelter and caused several canoes to dump their occupants into the Potomac.

Among those rescued from the river were Jessie Stern, 3733 W street northwest, and Mr. and Mrs. Hyman Graus, 2034 O street northwest. Listening to the symphony concert from a canoe, they attempted to reach shelter when the storm broke and were overturned. They were taken to the concert barge by Private Franklin Moretti, of the Harbor Precinct, until their canoe was righted, when they returned to the river.

Several other canoeists were tossed overboard when their frail craft capsized. All managed to reach shore safely or were rescued by Park Police or Harbor Police.

No Rain at Weather Bureau

The weatherman, who forecast fair and cooler weather for today with lowered humidity, was unable to estimate the volume of rain which poured down on the District. It shunned the vicinity of the Weather Bureau, he said, leaving no reading on his instruments.

Little damage was reported, despite violence of the sudden downpour. A tree uprooted on Nineteenth street between R and S streets northwest threw traffic into a snarl until it was cut and hauled aside by firemen.

100 Stranded by Flood

From Harrisonburg, Va., the Associated Press reported efforts were being pressed to reach 100 members of the Rawley Springs summer colony marooned by Saturday's rains and floods. Reports which trickled from the colony were that scanty food supplies were being shared among the stranded families.

Secondary roads were blocked at scores of places in the State by high water, but highway workers partially cleared out a landslide on Route 33, passing 3 miles from Rawley, to open up the Harrisonburg-Franklin, W. Va., main artery to creeping one-way traffic.

Slayer, 70, Besieged in Barn With Girl, Shoots 9, Escapes

By International News Service

Cynthiana, Ky., July 30.—"Shoot to kill" orders were issued today as a posse of 100 combed the Blue Grass region for a 70-year-old "model husband" who shot a police chief to death and wounded nine other persons when he was trapped in the barn where he had lured a young girl.

The fugitive is Charles Allen, a farmer, who eluded the posse and a pack of bloodhounds during the night by slipping out of the barn and crawling to freedom through a corn field.

To make good his escape Allen had stood off an attacking army of hundreds who tried to storm his stronghold last night. Hundreds of shots were fired in the three-hour battle that lasted until midnight, but Allen apparently came through unscathed.

He killed Police Chief George M. Dickey, 78, head of the Cynthiana police force for 27 years, and wounded eight others in the attacking force.

None of the others shot was seriously wounded. Several times during the fight Allen called out that he intended only to "wing" his foes unless they came too close.

He shot Chief Dickey when the aged officer disregarded the be-

Mrs. Norton Calls Pay-Hour Fight 'Vicious'

Appeals Battle With Rules Committee to Country in Radio Talk

Representative Norton, of New Jersey, chairman of the House Labor Committee, last night carried to the country, via radio, her battle with the House Rules Committee over bitterly-contested proposals anent the wage-hour act.

She charged that a "vicious minority" is seeking repeal of the act and declared her committee had been "deprived of its rights and privileges by the House Rules Committee" when the latter, "by unprecedented action," granted a rule to take to the House floor amendments proposed by Representative Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, although the Barden bill "never had been considered by the Committee on Labor."

Mrs. Norton denounced the North Carolinian's measure as a move to wreck the present law. She said it would exempt "more than 1,000,000 workers from both the wage and hour benefits and in addition another 500,000 workers would not receive the benefit of the maximum hour provisions."

"Hundreds of thousands of employes long exploited," she continued, "would lose the gains that have been theirs since October 24, last . . . In addition, the hours standards of from 250,000 to 400,000 higher-paid clerical and skilled wage-earners would be endangered."

The Rules Committee voted out the amendments proposed by Mrs. Norton's committee and Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator, but made it possible for the House to substitute the Barden amendments or another set proposed by Representative Ramspeck.

Roosevelt Gets 2 Marlin, Making Up for Lost Time

Ocean City, Md., July 30 (AP).—President Roosevelt caught a 70-pound marlin today and later radio reports to his shore guide said he had boated a second one whose weight was not given.

The guide said the President fought his first fish half an hour before it was boated and that it made about 12 jumps before being brought alongside.

A radio message to shore said the yacht Potomac was heading back to Washington after the President's success. Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, also caught one, but the message did not give the size of the fish.

After fishing fruitlessly all day yesterday in the midst of one of the biggest schools in this area's history, the President started again this morning about 8:30. An hour later he hooked the first one. He boated the second about 11 a. m.

White marlin usually run about 60 pounds.

Baby One of 12 Hurt in Air Crash

Chicago, July 30 (INS).—Twelve persons including a 1-year-old baby were injured today, several seriously, when a trimotored sightseeing airplane crashed in a Southwest-side prairie today, a few minutes after taking off from the municipal airport.

When only a few hundred feet off the ground, one of the motors stalled and the big plane nosed over into a dive.

The baby was one of the five taken to Holy Cross Hospital and was said to be in a serious condition.

McNutt Backs Roosevelt's World Policy

Comes Out in Favor Of Using Influence Of U. S. to Assist Democratic Powers

Special Dispatch to The Post

Cleveland, July 30.—Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security Administrator, in his first formal statement on public questions since he took that position, tonight warmly praised the Roosevelt Administration's policy of assisting other "nonwarlike" powers.

Committing himself, in the view of political observers, to continuation of co-operation with European democracies should the McNutt-for-President campaign succeed, the former Indiana Governor criticized contentions of "isolationists" and declared:

"In asking any country to defend the peace, or in assisting it to do so by exerting a steady influence in favor of nonwarlike powers, we are not assisting that other country as much as we are assisting ourselves."

Claims "Sovereign Right"

Speaking on "International Peace Day" at the World Poultry Congress here, McNutt called on the Nation to let the world know that "we claim our sovereign right, with all other peace-loving nations, to insist that none has a right to impose on us, or any of us, the anarchy of savage times."

The Administration's unsuccessful effort to repeal the arms embargo clauses of the neutrality act had served "to present the issue whether we can withdraw from the entire current of world affairs, even though the rest of the world sinks into the disintegrating chaos of a general war."

The United States, he conceded, has no responsibility for international settlements outside the New World, "and even less responsibility for the methods by which any nation chooses to govern itself."

Interest in U. S.

"We do have an interest, however," he added, "that other countries shall not attempt to force their political doctrines on us; that in solving their difficulties they do not precipitate the world into a war, which will necessarily affect the United States economically, if indeed we can avoid being embroiled in actual military conflict."

Discussing proposals for "self-sufficient" isolation, he said:

"We could, theoretically make a self-sufficient hemisphere; and we could then let the rest of the world descend to any kind of cataclysm into which it cared to drift. This plan is possible, on paper at least, and many honest Americans think that it should be tried.

"But our isolationist friends do not tell the other side of the story. The resources of this hemisphere, and particularly of South America, are an integral part of the economic life of the Old World. For a solid century designs and intrigues to absorb a part of the New World

Robert Elliott, The Executioner, Is Ill in New York

New York, July 30 (AP).—Robert G. Elliott, official executioner for several Northeastern States, has been ill for two weeks, his wife disclosed tonight.

Elliott, who acts in a similar capacity in other nearby Eastern States, was scheduled to throw the switch at a double electrocution at the Massachusetts State Prison this week.

Among those Elliott has executed were Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray, Bruno Richard Hauptmann and Sacco and Vanzetti.

In his 13-year career as executioner he has turned the switch of death on more than 300 persons, at a fee of $150 each.

Troops Returned To Harlan Mines

Harlan, Ky., July 30 (INS).—A coal mine dynamite blast and a fiery cross on the mountainside today brought National Guardsmen back to the Harlan County coal fields.

The outbreak was blamed by officials on opponents of the compromise agreement between the Harlan Coal Operators Association and the United Mine Workers designed to end the strife in the district.

British Told To Get Out Of Tsinan

Tension Rises as Japanese Extend Anti-English Drive Over North China

By the Associated Press

Shanghai, (Monday) July 31.—The campaign to drive Britons out of North China was extended while British-Japanese differences in Shanghai smoldered today.

The anti-British campaign brought these developments yesterday:

Britons reaching Tientsin from Tsinan in Shantung Province said a committee had written all British nationals there a warning their lives would not be safe after August 10.

The Japanese press in Tientsin reported the anti-British committee in Tsangchow, Hopeh Province city 50 miles south of Tientsin, had ordered all British missionaries to leave.

Peiping police visited all Chinese shops and warned them to remove British goods from their shelves. Thousands of new posters appeared with denunciations of British influence.

British officials in Shanghai were reported preparing a protest to the Japanese against their alleged encroachment Saturday on British territory in erecting barbed wire barricades on North Kiangsi Road, boundary between the British and Japanese defense sectors here. Quiet was restored to the area after the Japanese opened gaps in the wires at street intersections, allowing Chinese free passage between the two sectors. Thousands of Chinese fled in terror into the British zone Saturday and camped in the street alongside the barrier.

Chinese Afraid to Buy

Domei (Japanese news agency) reported Japanese military authorities in Peiping and Tientsin were "bluntly accusing Britons of practicing flagrant double diplomacy" in the Far East.

It said the military was determined to insist on British surrender on the currency questions being discussed in the British-Japanese negotiations in Tokyo.

The military, Domei continued, asserted it was impossible to reconcile the British-Japanese agreement of a week ago with statements by British Prime Minister Chamberlain and Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax that Britain had not changed her policy in China.

(Under the agreement the British government recognized the Japanese forces in China had "special requirements." Chamberlain declared it "did not connote any change in British policy in regard to China.")

British commercial circles in Tsingtao, Shantung port, said the anti-British boycott movement in Shantung Province had brought business to a virtual standstill. They said Chinese were afraid to purchase British goods.

Trade restrictions in Tsingtao and elsewhere in Shantaung also are curtailing American business.

Parley Breakdown Seen

London, July 30 (AP).—Fears were expressed in informed quarters today the British-Japanese talks in Tokyo on the Tientsin dispute were headed toward a breakdown.

Serious difficulties were said to have developed from Japanese demands that Britain support Japanese-backed currency in the British concession in the North China

U. S. Held Safe From Surprise Sea Attack

Admiral Leahy Urges Navy Program Be Pushed to Completion

No sea force afloat today could deliver a surprise attack on the United States, Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Navar Operations, revealed in his annual report made public yesterday. He is retiring from active Navy duty to be governor of Puerto Rico.

Not until the Navy "that is now built and building" is in commission does Admiral Leahy feel sure "we should be sufficiently strong to defeat the fleet of any single power wherever it can be brought to action."

"Fleets of the major powers are now expanding rapidly," he said, "but provided they do not expand beyond what we now believe to be their building programs, the Chief of Naval Operations is of the opinion that the Navy built, building and authorized, together with the bases in existence and in prospect will provide sufficient protection for the vital sea frontiers of the United States."

Lauds Secretary Swanson

The fleet's battle efficiency, the training and morale of its men, he said, are "believed to be unequaled by any major naval power" and today's enlisted man is superior, in education and mental caliber, to that of any other period in history. He urged that recruiting keep pace with construction of ships.

The admiral urged also that the billion-dollar fleet expansion voted last year by Congress, and the new air bases authorized at this session, "be pushed to completion at the earliest practicable date."

He urged that other air, destroyer and submarine bases recommended this year by a Naval Board be started with as little delay as possible.

Proud of the Navy's air forces, generally rated the world's strongest fleet auxiliary, Admiral Leahy cited the flight of 32 long-range patrol planes some 2,500 miles from San

Seashore Search For D. C. Writer's Body Is Futile

Harpswell, Me., July 30 (AP).—Volunteers and members of the sheriff's department searched vainly today for the body of Edward J. Duffy, 35-year-old Washington newspaperman, discovery of whose clothes on a beach aroused fears he might have drowned.

Rockiness of the sea bottom where Duffie supposedly went down made grappling impossible.

2 Killed, 20 Injured in Auto Accidents in District Area

Two persons were killed yesterday in a traffic accident on the Washington-Baltimore highway at North Laurel, Md., when an auto carrying a driver and nine passengers crashed into a bridge abutment over the Patuxent River. The other eight in the car were injured. Twelve persons were injured, seven in one crash, in other traffic accidents in Washington and vicinity.

The dead persons are Edward Lapce, 45, and Richard Davis, 5 months. The infant died en route to the University of Maryland Hospital, while Lance was pronounced dead at the scene. The driver of the car, Emory Davis, 37, father of the dead child; his wife, Grace Davis, and their five other children, ranging in ages from 5 to 14 years, and Mary Lacey, 37, were taken to the hospital but were not believed to have been injured seriously. All are from Philadelphia.

Four persons were taken to hospitals as a result of a collision at Thirteenth street and Maryland avenue northeast between two cars operated by Russell Hawkins, colored, 25, of 33 K street northeast, and Sherman Hoover, 34, of Arlington, Va. Hawkins was charged with not having a driver's permit.

His wife, Rose Hawkins, 23, was taken to Casualty Hospital where

British Plan To Buy Peace Reported Put Up to France

Raw Materials, But No Colonies, Would Be Given Hitler, Mussolini

European Picture

SOVIET RUSSIA warned Britain and France to abandon "nonintervention"—in effect, to guarantee small nations against internal Nazi-Fascist aggression—if their proposed alliance is to be effected.

FRANCE'S NAVY is being expanded, Navy Minister Campinchi said, revealing a "second navy" is being formed.

GREAT BRITAIN, preparing for the possibility of an "August crisis," will have nearly a million men in active service in the next few weeks.

ANGLO-FRENCH plans for the defense of Poland include long-range air and sea operations, and shipment of mechanized troops via the Dardanelles and Rumania, a correspondent declares.

Purchase Proposal

By the United Press.

Paris, July 30.—High French quarters today reported receipt of a British proposal that a common "peace plan" be drawn up and submitted to the dictators as soon as Europe's security bloc is consolidated by the inclusion of Soviet Russia.

The reported plan for a durable peace would serve as a formula permitting the nations to reduce their armaments, demobilize reservists and get back to a peacetime economic and diplomatic footing.

The proposal, as reported in Paris, would offer Fuehrer Hitler and Premier Mussolini a share in raw materials providing they promise to abandon their policies of force and threat of force and agree to respect the "status quo" in Europe and Africa.

Revive Wohlthat Rumors

The report revived speculation regarding the talks in London ten days ago between Dr. Helmuth Wohlthat, German economics expert, and R. S. Hudson, British secretary of overseas trade, which led to reports Britain was preparing to offer Germany a $5,000,000,000 loan in exchange for Hitler's promise of peace.

Prime Minister Chamberlain told Parliament no loan to Germany was envisaged, but he defended Hudson's right to discuss economic matters "unofficially" with Wohlthat.

The British were said to have sounded out the French government on the common "peace plan" proposal, which would embrace Turkey, Greece, the Balkan States and other nations of the European "peace front" as well as the signatories of the projected triple alliance.

The British soundings were said to have pointed to the serious economic possibilities of the present condition in which European nations are spending more than they can afford for arms and mobilized armies.

French Haven't Replied

As yet the French government has not replied, it was said.

The British argued, it was reported, that lasting peace is impossible so long as Europe's rival camps continue to glower at each other across barbed wire.

The chief responsibility of the "peace front," aside from making itself strong enough to resist any aggression, is to consolidate peace by offering a share of the world's raw materials to the dictators if the latter will convince the world they want to preserve peace.

The British were understood to have made clear there would be no offer to return Germany's war-lost colonies or to recarve the map of Africa to suit Der Fuehrer and Il Duce.

However, the colonial powers would agree to share their raw

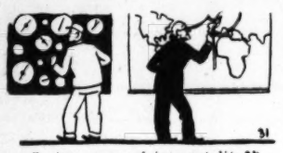
Personages now prominent because of their official positions, like Presidents and cabinet members, were excluded.



"—two sure of immortality?"

You'd never guess which two received the most votes. They were (1) Clarence Streit, the journalist, who is now devoting his time to advocating a union and international congress of the U. S. A. and 14 other democracies; and (2) Howard Scott, the currently forgotten apostle of technocracy.

Hatch Bill Veto Predicted By Plumley

Accuses President of Seeking to Protect A Federal Tammany

By the United Press.

Prediction that President Roosevelt would veto the Hatch "clean politics" bill came from a Republican House member as governmental and political circles awaited the President's decision on whether the bill shall become law.

Representative Plumley (Republican), of Vermont, last night described the bill as the "most sweeping advance in civil service reform in 30 years" and said that "Congress has at last applied the ax to political spoils in the Federal administrative services."

He accused the President of advancing "specious argument" against the measure, as exemplified by his remarks Friday, and said that "he thus takes his place as the most voracious spoilsman in the history of American politics."

Sees U. S. Tammany

Plumley predicted that Mr. Roosevelt would veto the bill "so as to hold complete, personal control of the Democratic national convention of 1940" and added that "his evasions indicate simply that he plans to lean heavily upon the Federal pay rollers for both contributions and political organization in the campaign."

"The New Deal strategy board," he declared, "know full well that they have converted the Federal service into a gigantic Tammany election machine. Spoils patronage is now the President's chief reliance in his attempt to retain control of the party."

He called "pure humbug" Mr. Roosevelt's description of the bill as "vague."

The measure would outlaw political activities of all except top bracket Federal jobholders, thus weakening Mr. Roosevelt's own political organization and seriously damaging that of Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley.

Principal beneficiary apparently would be conservative Vice President Garner, 1940 Presidential candidate, who has no appreciable support of Federal officeholders but probably would inherit strength through weakening of the Roosevelt-Farley combine. Garner supported the bill and reportedly provided the inspiration for a powerful Republican-Conservative Democratic Congressional coalition which swept it to passage.

Await Third-Term Views

Meanwhile political observers speculated on whether President Roosevelt will indicate his third-term views in a message to the fourth biennial convention of the Young Democrats of America which opens in Pittsburgh on August 10.

He declined an invitation to appear in person because he will be at sea on a cruise at that time. However, Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, who initiated his Presidential campaign last year at a bizarre cocktail party in the fashionable Mayflower Hotel here, will be present and speak.

Officials of the organization doubted last night that the third-term controversy would come before the convention.

At the same time, they felt sure that the issue would be thoroughly explored by the resolutions committee in its secret deliberations.

Leaders of the organization admitted that the explosive issue might come before the delegates unofficially through floor speeches. Such an eventuality, they said, cannot be foreseen or prevented. Those who are agitating for a third-term for Mr. Roosevelt considered it significant that Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, an ardent New Dealer, was selected as the convention keynoter.

He would not say last night whether he would specifically propose a third term for the Chief Executive, but he asserted he would probably discuss the subject "in a general way."

"I may discuss what our party has done and why we should not slip back in the old ways of government," he said.

Other speakers include Senate Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, who has taken no public stand on the third-term controversy, and Solicitor General Jackson, who recently declared that the President was robbed of his first term by Supreme Court invalidations of New Deal laws.

The president of the Young Democrats is Pitt Tyson Maner, of Montgomery, Ala. The three leading candidates for his post are H. Mat Adams, of Springfield, Ill.; Harry Shank, of Urbana, Ohio, and John V. Neff, of Staunton, Va.

200 Veterans Honor Fr. Ryan Of Walter Reed

Rep. Hunter Speaks at Breakfast for Priest Ordered to Hawaii

Two hundred representatives of veterans organizations yesterday heard Representative Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, state that there are 218 war veterans in the present Congress "who are doing all they can, consistent with Americanism, to keep this country out of war."

Speaking at a breakfast in honor of the Rev. Patrick J. Ryan, retiring chaplain of Walter Reed Hospital, Hupter spoke of the interest in the Army and Navy exhibited by members of the present Congress. There are 181 Representatives and 37 Senators who have seen wartime service, he said.

Father Ryan has been transferred to Honolulu and will leave for his new post August 6.

Representatives of the Irish War Veterans, the Catholic War Veterans, the World War Veterans and the Spanish War Veterans attended the breakfast at the Silver Spring Hotel that followed a farewell solemn mass conducted at Walter Reed Hospital Chapel by Father Ryan.

In his sermon Father Ryan paid tribute to the soldier. "A soldier's duty is loyalty to his commanding officer," he said. "Therefore, since Christ is the commanding officer of the Christian army, so we all should be steadfast and loyal in our duty to Him."

At the Silver Spring Hotel, American and Irish colors hung from the walls as William F. Dorsey, 91-year-old veteran of the Civil War and a life member of the Irish War Veterans, arose amid applause to speak in honor of Father Ryan.

Other speakers included Col. Michael Casey, senior national vice commander of the Sons of Civil War Veterans; the Rev. William J. McVeigh, a World War chaplain with the American Army in France; James Conlin and Thomas Lyons, of the Ancient Order of Hibernians; Edward Ahern, a naval veteran of the Spanish War, and William Hickey, a veteran of the Philippine insurrection.

Ester Cloyd, a soprano, sang the aria, "Dich Theure Halle," from Wagner's Tannhauser. Later she rendered three songs, "Villanelle," by Del Acqua; "Spirit Flower," by Campbell Tipton and "Midsummer," by Amy Worth.

Elena de Sayn, a violinist, started the program with a viola selection, "Poem for Viola," by Ruygrok. She joined with Miss Brosius in the concluding selection, "Fantasy," by Saint Saens. Dictatorships Found Eyeing Latin America

Mineral Resources of Southern Continent Held War Essentials

Latin America's mineral resources are the cynosure of the eyes of the totalitarian states in a war-tensed world, the Foreign Policy Association declared last night in a survey of strategic materials available in Latin America.

In time of war, said the survey, written by Howard J. Trueblood, Latin American resources of such materials as tin, manganese, chromium, bauxite, antimony and tungsten might well be "of decisive importance."

Heretofore exploitation of these resources has been done largely by corporations, not by foreign countries, the survey pointed out. But "with imperialism entering a new phase through the expansion of the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo bloc," the survey added, "industrial nations look to Latin America with a renewed interest."

The United States, Trueblood pointed out, provides only a limited market for many of Latin America's exports, such as wheat, metals, because those also are chief corn, meat, petroleum and most products of the United States.

"On the other hand," he said, "Latin America furnishes so many commodities essential to this country's living standard that imports from Latin America are far more essential to the United States than exports to that region."

He wrote that with purely commercial considerations subordinate to political or military requirements throughout a large section of the world, the struggle of the have-nots for raw materials and of the haves to maintain and strengthen existing sources of supply has tended to overshadow efforts to sell goods manufactured from these raw materials."

Comparative ease of transportation and "the invulnerability of Latin America to blockade" make it possible for any nation to obtain resources from that part of the world, the report says.

"Until the appearance of bilateral trade agreements and the spread of war fears, the question of control or availability of Latin American raw materials and foodstuffs was almost purely academic. Even today, despite agreements negotiated by the totalitarian countries, and special trade arrangements on the part of Great Britain and the United States, the majority of Latin American products is readily available to any nation which has foreign exchange."

The author added:

"An essential feature of the Washington administration's Latin American aid program is the development of new and noncompetitive products in this area which may find a market in the United States. Co-operation along these lines, together with financial assistance and extension of the trade agreements program, is destined both to check totalitarian penetration of Latin America and bring the wartime self-sufficiency of the Western Hemisphere closer to realization."

Ford Observes 76th Birthday; Enthusiastic Toward Future

Motor King Looks 15 Years Younger Than Actual Age

By the Associated Press

Detroit, July 30.—Today was Henry Ford's seventy-sixth birthday anniversary, but the noted industrialist spent it without special observance.

After morning church services at Greenfield Village, which he attended with his family, Ford passed most of the day with Mrs. Ford at Fairlane, his estate in suburban Dearborn, reading scores of congratulatory telegrams and letters.

Ford at 76 seems to have stayed the effect of time. But for the slight stoop of his shoulders, he appears exactly as he did 15 years ago—enthusiastic about the future and convinced there is "nothing seriously wrong with the world excepting to those who seek an easy way to success."

Explaining his apparent good health, Ford says:

"I don't worry. I don't eat too much of anything. And I have faith—faith that what has happened and what will happen is for the best."

Students Want To Help Name Hatchet Editor

Committee Formed To Protest Failure To Confirm Burnett

A George Washington University committee consisting of faculty and administrative members, without student representation, may be given authority to appoint the entire staff of the Hatchet, university publication, a student committee protesting the "Burnet case," said yesterday.

The declaration was prepared by the newly-organized committee for the defense of student rights, to protest failure to confirm, as next year's Hatchet editor, Frank Ford Burnet, after his election by the publication staff. E. H. Bellows, of 2123 Eye street, northwest, was named as chairman.

The committee declared that the faculty publications committee, which passes on such elections, had decided Burnet was not competent for the post and had petitioned the trustees to undertake a study and reorganization of the Hatchet. It further stated that the publications committee had requested authority to appoint a full staff and editorial board if the reorganization was not completed by the beginning of the fall term.

In effect, the protesting student group said, a full Hatchet staff may be appointed by the faculty "without reference to those now on the staff." The committee added that the publication committee report "is an unwarranted and unjust extension of a doubtful prerogative, impliedly expressed, of a faculty committee appointed by the administration to dismiss at random any student from any office whatsoever whether or not charges have been preferred and whether or not charges have been established."

FHA Cuts Home Interest Rates made into lower rental areas than has been heretofore possible for private enterprise."

Jones Praises Reduction

Some lending institutions have been making FHA-insured mortgages at 4½ per cent and even less, he said, and added that "prior to the establishment of the FHA in 1934 no uniform Nation-wide home-financing interest rate existed, and in many regions interest rates of 8 per cent to 10 per cent were not uncommon."

Praise for the FHA action announced yesterday came from Jones, loan administrator, who wrote McDonald:

"I feel sure that banks, insurance companies and other investors in these mortgages have learned their value by now and that they will be glad to make and invest in the loans on this basis."

He added:

"You are rendering the country a great service through stimulating new home building by making it possible for people to win homes approximately as easy as renting them, and I feel that every added inducement we can make to this end has a great national value."

McDonald said that in the five years of its existence FHA has insured home financing loans, including those for modernization and repair, amounting to more than $2,500,000,000 "and has enabled approximately 10,000,000 people to improve their living conditions."

Currently, 500 new homes on the average are being started under FHA inspection each working day. In the week ended July 22, 3,122 of these homes were started, a new high record. Construction of new homes under the FHA plan in the first six months of 1939 showed a gain of 80 per cent over the first half of 1938.

into European or Asiatic political systems have been attempted; they have been prevented principally by our Monroe Doctrine. If we wish hemispheric isolation, we must recognize what it really means.

Concomitants Described

"Isolation means trebling our present Navy; for we should have the coastlines of two huge contients to defend. It means maintaining a military establishment capable of putting a protective expeditionary force into any part of the New World at any time.

"It means abandoning many markets for our agricultural products. It means putting two-thirds of the cotton-producing South out of action. It means the end of our wheat and cattle-producing West the reshifting of a great part of our population and stagnation in many, if not all, of our manufacturing centers in the industrial East.

"I do not wish to play the role of Jeremiah, but I must point out that we may, of course, be driven to the form of life just outlined; to a lower standard of living, a militarist country and the crushing burden of defending the New World.

Surrender Must Never Be

"But it is the last thing we should do. It is to accept defeat; to surrender outright to the militarist ideal. The word 'surrender' has not yet been learned in America. It must never be.

"We do not have the simple question of minding our own business. I wish we did. We have the question of whether we will keep quiet while other people mind and mold our business for us.

"What then must be done if the United States is to make an active contribution to peace?"

Quotes Roosevelt, Hull

The question, he said, has already been answered by the President and Secretary of State Hull, from whose speech at Nashville, Tenn., a year ago he quoted, as follows:

"We should exert all moral force of which we are capable toward influencing other nation's work for the same end (peace) and to accept and employ the civilized practices of specific settlement of controversies . . ."

The position, he said, was summarized in the Pan American Day speech last April in which Mr. Roosevelt said:

"We have the right to say that there shall not be an organization of world affairs which permits us no choice but to turn our countries into barracks, unless we are to be the vassals of some conquering empire."

McNutt said he was convinced that the bulk of the American people "stand squarely behind this policy."

Gale Damages Ship Assigned to Byrd Expedition

By the Associated Press

The Coast Guard said last night that one officer and several members of the crew of the cutter Northland, assigned to the Byrd expedition to the antarctic, had been injured in a four-hour battle with a hurricane off the Lower California Coast.

One lifeboat was swept away and the others made unfit for use, the report said, but the ship itself suffered only minor damage.

Lieut. Comdr. William W. Kenner, in command, reported the boat had ridden out the storm and was continuing to the Canal Zone, en route to Boston.

All Spanish Men Must Work 15 Days For State, Sans Pay

Burgos, July 30 (AP).—Gen. Franco today decreed that all Spanish men between the ages of 18 and 50 must work 15 days each year for the State without pay.

To speed national reconstruction, Franco ordered all able-bodied men to register for assignments in municipal, provincial and state works projects on August 31. Failure to work or pay equivalent wages is punishable by fines and imprisonment.

In effect Franco revived a law prevailing in some European countries in the Middle Ages when peasants were required to labor a specified number of days each year for the state without pay.

Soviets Urge Front Based on 'Full Equality'

Attack Allies' Policy Of 'Nonintervention' To Stop Nazi Aggression

By the United Press.

Moscow, July 30.—The government newspaper, Izvestia, asserted today, without specifically mentioning the 16-week-old negotiations with Britain and France, that Soviet Russia wants a European peace front "based on full reciprocity, equality and honesty."

Izvestia said that to achieve a united front against aggression there must be "a sincere repudiation" of the policy of nonintervention.

The use of the word nonintervention seemingly referred in guarded manner to the stumbling block in the tripower talks created by Russia's demand that Britain and France guarantee the Baltic States against indirect aggression such as an internal Nazi putsch. The British have contended that such a decision might be construed as intervention in the internal politics of foreign nations.

The Soviets contend this "nonintervention" permits destruction of independent states by aggressor nations and even condones and helps such destruction. They point to Spain, Austria, Czecho-Slovakia and Memel as areas where "internal aggression" resulted in Nazi-Fascist conquests.

Delay Till Fall Possible

The Izvestia article describing Soviet Russia's attitude toward war was published in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the outbreak of the World War.

"The Bolsheviks, heading 170,000,000 Soviet people, are ready at any moment to smash to atoms any Fascist aggressor daring to fan the flames of a second imperialist war against the borders of Soviet land," it declared.

Foreign observers speculated that delay in concluding the Anglo-French-Soviet alliance might have been deliberate in view of Russia's dislike of British Prime Minister Chamberlain and suspicions that he may again return to "appeasement."

At the same time, it was pointed out, Chamberlain has no love for the Soviet system but may feel that so long as the negotiations here continue without a breakdown Germany may be restrained from taking any aggressive action.

If this theory is true, the "stalling" in the negotiations may well continue throughout August and perhaps into September until Europe's harvests are in and the danger of war appears more distant, some quarters said.

British Cabinet Called

London, July 30 (INS).—Prime Minister Chamberlain tonight asked his highest cabinet associates to meet with him tomorrow morning to go over a statement he is expected to make in the House of Commons in the afternoon, announcing general staff talks among Britain, France and Russia.

Besides scrutinizing the statement, the "inner cabinet" will hold itself in readiness to consider any last-minute telegraphic word that may reach London from Sir William Seeds, British ambassador in Moscow, relative to Soviet suggestions as to the scope and nature of the forthcoming military consultations.

In diplomatic exchanges at Moscow today it was understood the agenda of the Anglo-French-Soviet staff talks was discussed. The Russian government, it was learned, demanded that the consultations, scheduled to open in Moscow this week, cover a wide field, including the unrestricted exchange of all army, naval and air strategy and action plans now in the archives of the war departments of the three powers.

So sweeping were the Russian suggestions that members of Britain's imperial general staff and Admiral of the Fleet Sir Alfred Ernle Chatfield interrupted their weekend rests to give immediate study to the Moscow proposals.

Moscow Remains Silent

Chamberlain's parliamentary announcement probably will be paralleled by a statement on the part of Premier Daladier in Paris.

Moscow refused to agree to a joint communique announcing "an agreement to agree," thereby leaving to London and Paris to give the 16-week-old negotiations whatever publicity they desire.

"The announcements probably will be made Monday if all goes well," a spokesman of the French foreign office said today.

It was reported in Paris that Britain and France had been compelled to make still further concessions in order to enable the start of military talks.

London and Paris, it was reported, were compelled to abandon their demand that the Soviets underwrite the Anglo-French antiaggression guarantees to the Netherlands, Switzerland and Luxembourg where a totalitarian attack would strike at Anglo-French interests.

The thorny question of antiaggression guarantees for Russia's Baltic neighbors—Esthonia, Latvia and Finland—remains unsettled and is the outstanding stumbling block.

Near Death in Barn Shooting

sieged man's orders to stand his ground.

Those wounded are Ike Morrison, 35; Wright Kimbrough, 62! Otis Whitaker, 60, all shot in the arms; Frank Hulina, 21; Harry Jones, 35; and John Cuss, all shot in the legs; Gene Dunn, 17, shot in the chest, and Robert Jenkins, face wounds.

Neighbors Call Police

The bloody siege began after Policemen Chester Hart and Roy Fightmaster had been summoned to the Allen farm on the complaint of neighbors, who said they had seen the septugenarian take a young girl into his barn.

As they approached, Allen screamed a warning that he was armed and to stay away.

The two officers, familiar with the man's reputation as one of the best shots in the district, dived for cover and one crawled away to summon aid. The entire police and fire department surrounded the barn.

Breese Foils Tear Gas

After Chief Dickey fell dead, the officers tried to drive Allen out with tear gas, but fumes were dissipated by a strong breeze.

The sound of the shots at one time attracted more than 1,500 persons to the scene.

Allen was said to have fired more than 25 blasts from his shotgun, and, fear that he had a large supply of ammunition, held back the besieging force.

Once during the evening two police rigged up a spotlight in an adjoining building, but Allen blew it out with one charge. Neither of the watchers was injured.

I.R.A. Warns England of New Terror

Threatens Reprisals For Deportations; Rioting in Glasgow

By the United Press.

London, July 30.—Scotland Yard today was warned of a "terrifying attack on England" by a battalion of 500 men of the outlawed Irish Republican Army in reprisal for wholesale expulsions being carried out under Britain's new anti-terrorist law.

The warning, contained in an anonymous message, heightened fears of new bomb outrages and the full strength of Scotland Yard and the London police was held on the alert with all week-end leaves canceled. Thousands of officers were deployed around strategic spots including government buildings, railroad stations and the homes of cabinet ministers.

I. R. A. Linked to Reich

The anonymous message warning of the "terrifying attack" coincided with statements in the British press that the I. R. A. has a large "expeditionary force," divided into bombing squads of 100 to 200 men each.

Newspapers openly charged that the Irish terrorists are being supported and financed in part by Germany. It was alleged that many Germans attended meetings held in the United States recently by Sean Russell and contributed money to back the "Republican Army's "declaration of war" on England.

Disorders, heretofore largely centered in the large cities of England, spread to Glasgow today with rioting in the Gorbals district where two rival Irish gangs—"the Stickers" and "the Beehive Boys"—fought with bricks, bottles and iron bars.

When police intervened the gangs joined in resisting the common enemy and there were pitched battles in the streets for two hours. Twelve men and women were arrested.

The "great flight to Erin," as the exodus of Irish men and women is being called in London, continued at increasing pace today as Scotland Yard squads methodically proceeded to round up 4,000 I. R. A. suspects.

Irish men and women by the score, fearing arrest, fled with their children across the Irish Sea to Eire, the former Irish Free State, which also has outlawed the I. R. A., but as yet has made no concerted drive against it.

Since Parliament's emergency approval of the anti-terrorist act Thursday night, 18 suspected I. R. A. terrorists have been deported.

Belfast, July 30 (AP).—A flying squad of policemen surprised an Irish Republican Army band secretly drilling on a nearby mountain today. The leader, an Irish Republican who had been sought for several months, was arrested.

Deportees Defiant

Dublin, July 30 (AP).—The first deportees to reach Ireland since England made effective a strong new law against the illegal Irish Republican Army told reporters tonight "the campaign will go on."

They expressed confidence the antiterror measure would not halt outbreaks of violence.

Shanghai (Monday), July 31 (AP).—Reports reaching Tsingtao from Tsimo, 40 miles to the north, said 4,000 Chinese who had been fighting with the Japanese had rebelled, killed six Japanese officers, captured four others and then joined Chinese national troops 100 miles away.

4 Soviet Airmen Get Eulogies in Red Press

Moscow, July 30 (AP).—Soviet newspapers today published eulogies of four prominent Russian airmen killed in the line of duty, but how or where official announcements failed to disclose.

One theory advanced was that they had been killed in Outer Mongolia, where Soviet forces are engaged in conflict with Japanese on the Manchukuo frontier.

port and hand over to the Japanese-dominated Peiping regime all silver belonging to the Chinese government and held in concession banks.

It was understood Ambassador Craigie was told to inform the Japanese the question could not be discussed in negotiations which were supposed to be confined to the local situation in Tientsin, where the Japanese have blockaded the British and French concessions since June 14.

If Japan persists in her demands, it was said, Britain might be forced to break off the negotiations.

Official circles already have stated Britain was considering the advisability of following Washington's example of denouncing the American-Japanese trade treaty by abrogating the British-Japanese trade pact of 1911 if the Tokyo talks fail.

It had been hoped anti-British agitation would cease during the Tokyo talks, but the present British view is that even if the Tientsin dispute were settled the situation in China still would be difficult with new incidents occurring almost daily.

U. S. Hospital Bombed

Chungking, China, July 30 (AP).—The United States Embassy received reports today that Japanese planes had bombed and destroyed the United Lutheran Mission Hospital at Kioshan, 150 miles north of Hankow, last Wednesday.

There were eight Chinese casualties. Dr. C. C. Skinsnes, of St. Paul, Minn., and others of the mission escaped unhurt.

The embassy confirmed earlier Chinese reports that the American Southern Baptist Stout Memorial Hospital was damaged and the Girls School destroyed by fire in a Japanese air raid Wednesday at Wuchow.

Demonstration in Tokyo

Tokyo (Monday), July 31 (AP).—Scattered groups of Japanese demonstrated before the British embassy this morning as a subcommittee meeting of the Anglo-Japanese conference was canceled and a general meeting of the conference scheduled for the afternoon.

Leahy Urges Stronger Navy

Diego to Honolulu last year.

To take part in last winter's fleet war games in the Caribbean, 48 patrol planes covered more than 10,000 miles in flying from San Diego to the South Atlantic and return, he noted.

Leahy praised Secretary Swanson as "a faithful protagonist of adequate Naval defense."

21 New Vessels Added

The conduct of Admiral H. E. Yarnell, commander of the Asiatic Fleet in the Far East during the recent troubled years, was praised as being "to the eminent satisfaction of this office and in keeping with the highest traditions of the Naval service." The officers and men of the submarine Squalus, which sank off Portsmouth, N. H., May 23, were praised for "courage and fortitude in conformity with the best traditions of our service."

The strength of the Navy during the year, Admiral Leahy reported, was 546 vessels of all types, including 348 ships at sea. Among the latter were 15 battleships, 36 light and heavy cruisers, five aircraft carriers, 121 destroyers and 58 submarines.

New vessels added during the year totaled 21, while 14 were placed out of commission and 12 were disposed of by sale, destruction or otherwise. Leahy called attention to the Navy's need for tenders and auxiliaries and urged addition of vessels of this type.

Enlisted strength, he reported, averaged 110,100 sailors and 17,500 Marines. These complements, he said, are insufficient for the Navy's needs.

The report outlined training and operations programs which, except for the loss of the Squalus, were carried out without untoward incident. Co-operation with the War Department, with civilian experts and with the Department of Commerce, the Munitions Control Board, the National Resources Committee and the Maritime Commission, was acknowledged and its value stressed. Improvements in Naval Reserve training were outlined.

Finally, the report revealed, 40,406,352 words were handled by radio in the Washington district and $35,000 was credited to "miscellaneous receipts' by Naval Communications for commercial messages sent where private facilities were not available.

A Step Backward

The Senate has approved a "rider" to the Administration lending bill, introduced by Senator Murray, which in effect nullifies a provision of the 1939 relief bill providing for the mandatory layoff of WPA workers employed 18 months or more. As a result of the Senate vote, WPA Administrator Harrington has telegraphed State relief agencies to delay contemplated dismissals until the fate of the Senate amendment is determined.

There has been a great deal of misunderstanding of the purpose of the enforced layoffs ordered by the WPA act as well as unjust criticism of those who have approved the change of policy. Unquestionably many of the 650,000 workers affected by this requirement will suffer hardship because of inability to find private employment. Moreover, work on some WPA projects will be—indeed has been—disrupted by the dropping of experienced workers whose places have been taken by untrained newcomers.

Nevertheless, the advantages of a more rapid turnover of WPA labor greatly outweigh these unavoidable hardships. The shifts are not intended to punish or discipline persons long on relief rolls, as Senator Murray assumes. Neither do they imply that these individuals have refused to take advantage of private offers of employment. Forced layoffs do, however, give an opportunity to equally deserving unemployed persons to obtain WPA work, instead of relying upon private charity or direct relief for support.

According to Col. Harrington's estimates, over 30 per cent of all those on WPA rolls have been there for at least 18 months. However undesirable relief work may be compared with a steady private job, it is generally conceded to be a boon to those who would otherwise be left to enforced idleness. Why, then, is it "arbitrary," or "unfeeling" to rotate a limited number of available jobs so that WPA employment may be spread more thinly over a larger group?

Among the relief workers, moreover, there are undoubtedly a certain number who feel satisfied to stay "put" and are not at all anxious to exchange their jobs for the uncertainties of private employment. It is no reflection on the character of WPA workers as a class to suggest that this situation exists and calls for a remedy. For it is most important to make relief workers realize that they have no prior or exclusive rights to the emergency jobs that have been created to tide the country over a period of depression. There are millions of idle persons equally entitled to participate in the benefits of work relief. Enforced rotation of jobs is simply a recognition of that fact.

In passing the Murray amendment the Senate has, therefore, taken a backward step, designed to nullify a desirable reform in relief employment policies. It is to be hoped that the House will resist the pressure that will undoubtedly be exerted to induce it to follow the Senate's lead.

Unfecund France

Among the new measures of national defense adopted by the French government are decrees imposing a tax on bachelors and childless married couples. From the proceeds of these taxes bonuses are to be paid to the parents of all French babies hereafter born. Quite obviously the purpose of these decrees is to replenish France's reserves of manpower in the next generation.

Considering the well known patriotism of the French people and their equally well known instinct of thrift, their reaction to this appeal cannot be readily forecast. It is possible that Frenchwomen may not consider the prospect of having children killed or maimed in defense of their country a sufficient inducement to bear them. Similar state-inspired stimuli to fecundity in Germany and Italy seem to have had as yet no appreciable effect on the birth rates of those countries.

In fact, birth rates in all European countries have been steadily shrinking since 1876, when the wave of European fertility that for some reason followed the Napoleonic wars, reached its peak. Indeed, over the last 60 years the French birth rate has shown less decline than those of England and Germany, which have been reduced by more than half. Between 1876 and 1926 the drop in the French birth rate was only 28.2 per cent, as compared to 49.4 per cent in Germany and 29.1 per cent in Italy. The reason is, of course, that in France the decline set in much earlier than elsewhere in Europe.

In 1935, the last year for which trustworthy comparative figures seem available, the French birth rate was 15.2 per thousand as against 18.9 in Germany. In Italy that year the rate was 23.3 per thousand, having dropped 4.5 since 1926 as against a drop of only 3.6 in France.

The seriousness of France's situation becomes apparent only when viewed in conjunction with the general death rate. Not only is the French death rate for 1935 substantially higher than that of Germany and even Italy; it is also higher than the French birth rate. This excess of deaths over births seems to have continued during the last three years. Thus, assuming no arrestation of the trend, it is mathematically possible to calculate the gradual extinction of the French nation.

France's extremely high general death rate—one of the highest in Europe—is doubtless due to the inordinately large proportion of aged and middle-aged elements in the French population. Thus France presents an interesting, and somewhat disturbing, study in the cumulative effects of a steadily shrinking birth rate such as has now set in in the United States.

Only A Political Hurdle

Powerful forces are working to bring about a veto of the Hatch bill. That measure, designed to curb "pernicious political activities," is being dissected with the utmost care for the purpose of exposing defects that would justify the President in sending it back to Congress. Yet the opponents have failed to discover a single argument that would serve as a peg on which to hang a veto.

Complaints as to the "vagueness" of the bill were readily exploded. All of the questions which President Roosevelt asked about the rights of Federal employes under the bill have been satisfactorily answered by reference to the civil service rules which he promulgated only last year. It cannot be too frequently noted that one foremost purpose of the bill is to extend civil service safeguards against political exploitation to all Federal employes, except the small policy-making group at the top.

Nor can it be said that Section 5 leaves any real doubt as to the rights of persons on relief. This part of the bill would make it unlawful for any person to "solicit or receive" political contributions from persons benefited by "any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes." The real purpose of this provision is not to encroach upon the rights of any group, but to protect relief workers from the demands of politicians who assume that they are entitled to a "cut" from funds granted by the Government to save the destitute from suffering.

Congressional acts for "relief purposes" is not an ambiguous phrase. It refers to legislation for the relief of destitution, not to unemployment compensation, farm subsidies and various other forms of benefits voted by Congress. But suppose the courts should give this section the broadest possible interpretation. Still it would serve only to prevent the recipients of direct benefits out of the Treasury from turning over part of those benefits, or other income at their command, to politicians seeking public office.

The principle of this section is sound regardless of how widespread its application might become. But actually the protection thus accorded is limited to the beneficiaries of what is generally known as "relief" and "work relief."

Representative Celler tried, rather desperately it appears, to find something unconstitutional in the bill to strengthen his request for a veto. But the best he could do was to assume that the clause forbidding Federal employes to interfere with State primaries is "doubtless unconstitutional." His statement coincides with reports that the Attorney General has found no constitutional objections to the bill. In any event it is built on an obvious fallacy. Mr. Celler assumed that Congress has attempted to "meddle" with primary elections. On the contrary, the Hatch bill forbids Federal employes to use their official authority to interfere with such functions. The result should be to give the States a freer hand than they have heretofore had in the conduct of primaries for nomination of Congressional candidates.

The paucity of arguments raised against the bill serves to emphasize the real nature of the opposition. It is based almost entirely upon the political shifts which this measure would necessitate. Under the Hatch bill party machinery could no longer be controlled through Federal patronage. Political organizations would have to stand on their own feet, and the Government service could then be operated solely for the benefit of the people as a whole.

Of course, this divorce of officeholders from political management would weaken some factions and thus indirectly strengthen others. For that reason it is anathema to those relying heavily upon Federal patronage. But that is of little concern to the citizen whose first interest is good government. The public ought clearly to understand that the desire to preserve certain political advantages that follow in the wake of the spoils system is the only real obstacle left in the way of this important reform.

Case For Abandonment

As the Administration's spending-lending program shrinks under the slashing assaults of the Senate and the House, the case for rejection of the remnants of the plan grows progressively stronger. The Senate has already deducted over $1,000,000,000 from the bill which called originally for an expenditure of $2,800,000,000. The House Banking and Currency Committee has cut $850,000,000 from the measure before recommending its passage. And there is a strong probability that further reductions will be forced by amendments from the floor.

There can be no mistaking the significance of these pruning activities. They betray the growing disaffection of Congress toward spending policies—a mounting skepticism regarding the efficacy of Federal expenditures as a cure for our economic disorders. There appears to be little interest in the long-time objectives of this latest pump-priming experiment, and slight disposition to discuss it on its merits.

Thus, the Senate devoted many hours of debate toward the close of last week to proposals designed to modify or undo reforms embodied in the new relief act. Saturday was given over mainly to discussion of the O'Mahoney amendment forbidding the use of public works funds in competition with private industry, and to speeches on such irrelevant subjects as the export of war materials and the Mexican oil controversy.

The attitude of the Senate, to judge from its zeal to trim the spending program as well as the discursive character of the debate, is that of men utterly out of sympathy with the Administration's plan and to a large extent unacquainted with its major purpose. The new program is based on the theory that private investment openings no longer provide adequate outlets for savings. Hence, the Government must come forward to provide the needed stimulus to investment activity. Advocates of this latest pump-priming plan believe that very large outlays are essential—outlays of a kind once restricted to private capital—to compensate for the lack of private investment initiative.

An adequate test of the validity of this theory calls for governmental lending (or spending) on a lavish scale without bothering overmuch about the deterrent effects of such operations upon private industry. Indeed, the alleged inertia of private groups is the chief excuse for launching the lending drive. Hence, the Senate's approval of the O'Mahoney amendment safeguarding private enterprise from Government interference runs counter to the basic theoretical assumption upon which the Administration program rests.

By drastically cutting the size of the lending program and restricting the utilization of funds Congress will prevent a thoroughgoing test of the new spending plan. At the same time, if it weakly consents to authorize the expenditure of part of what is asked for, it will add to the Federal debt and increase the danger of eventual fiscal calamity. Under the circumstances, the safe and the wise procedure would be to throw overboard the entire program.

If it be true that the human race profits by its mistakes, it should be doing a lot of profiting these days.

If a dad-blamed chigger were forty times bigger one jab of his digger would ruin your figger.

Loafers' Glory

From the Hartford Courant

Although it is not listed in the Postal Guide, there is, on the word of the Arkansas City Traveler, a town in North Carolina named Loafers' Glory. Doubtless there will be cynics to deny its existence; there is always someone who will try to take the joy out of life. But connoisseurs of odd place names will resist the attempt to discredit Loafers' Glory, which deserves a place beside those two other classics, Rabbit Hash and Pinchem Slyly, both of which are indubitably hamlets in the Kentucky mountains, although again, neither of them appears in the Postal Guide.

And why not a Loafers' Glory? Kentucky (where the amateur of place names turns for some of his choicest items) has a Julip (sic) an Ice, an Ep, and so help us, a Dingus. If Eighty Eight, Ky., is a town in good standing as it is, why not Loafers' Glory, N. C.? O. K. is in Pulaski County, Nonchalanta in Greenup, Nisi in Fleming and Marrowbone in Cumberland, unless the Postal Guide is lying. McGaha, Newt, Miracle, Mazie, Ready, Peevee, Shock, Stop, Subtle, Watch, Tub, Vest, and Viper are all Kentucky place names vouched for by the best authorities.

North Carolina is no slouch itself, even if the Postal Guide won't back up Loafers' Glory. It may have had its Gastonia trials, but on the other side of the ledger are such postffices as Radical, Revolution, Hasty and Salvo. Old Hundred, N. C., sounds like a good place to settle down in—quite a different sort of place from Hornet or Bee Tree. Were it not for the Tarheel State there would be no Just, no Butch, no Day Book and no Vade Mecum. The country could ill-afford the loss of any one of them.

Enough Bungling Errors

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
It is impossible to do other than agree wholeheartedly with the views expressed editorially by The Post on the spending-lending bill, and even to carry the general idea a step further.

Due to a temporary cessation of governmental idiocies a species of feeble recovery has got started. The best guarantee of its continuance is to shelve this spending-lending thing, in view of the terrific fruitless orgy of previous spending.

Let private forces take over—everything is shaping up that way naturally. Enough bungling errors have already been made by bureaucratic fixers and delivers to last a brace of decades.

Why butt in? Why stop the momentum? Why pitch in any more monkey wrenches? Saving that money would be today's greatest tonic.

The Retirement Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
It is stated in your paper that the liberalized pension features of the retirement bill were defeated because the representatives of certain employe groups would not accept the 4½ per cent contribution requirement from the employes. Will you please list these representatives, and the groups which they represent? I think it should be known who these parties are.

Revocation Of The Japanese Treaty

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
Mr. H. F. Entz in terse language expressed the view of all right-thinking and self-respecting Americans on American participation in Japanese aggression. However, Mr. Entz jumps too quickly to the conclusion that our "national shame is erased."

The abrogation of the Treaty of 1911 is the right kind of a gesture and a warning to Japan. But the flow of war materials to Japan is likely to be accelerated in the next six months so that the 56 per cent which we supplied in 1938 may jump to 70 per cent or 80 per cent for that period. In January the embargo on war materials to Japan will be discussed in Congress, and in the intervening six months much may happen to influence Congress against the decisive action which justice, human welfare, self-interest, as well as decency and self-respect demand.

The commercial interests which have been making profits from human suffering in China, will carry on an undercover campaign. They will plead in the private ears of Congressmen and shed crocodile tears over the proposed interference with legitimate commerce. Important, too, to this group, is the double profit on iron—one profit from Japan to build a navy and another profit from the United States to build another navy large enough to protect ourselves from the Japanese navy which we have helped to build. Unimportant to this group is the fact that we are arming a dangerous militarist nation which may use our own materials against us, to kill our soldiers and sailors and our civilians.

The Japanese likewise will find an embargo "unthinkable," will make grimaces (intended to be friendly), will bow and scrape before us, will bluster and threaten reprisals, and will make veiled threats of war. They will rationalize concerning the justness of their invasion, the unreasonableness of the Chinese and the benefits of their civilization to the Chinese.

However, Japan can do nothing to injure us. Without our materials she could not even continue her war in China and certainly not make war on the United States as well. Furthermore, we do not depend upon any goods imported from Japan even if Japan would cut off her own revenues by embargoing such goods.

HORACE TRUESDELL.
Washington, July 28.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
May I speak a word of warning regarding the new development in our Far Eastern policy. Why has the executive arm denounced the treaty with Japan? As a gesture in behalf of world peace? To put to effect the slowly rising indignation against the conquest of China? If these purposes alone prompt the step, that section of the public which is urging positive action should pause to consider the serious defects in a foreign policy based on idealism and altruism.

Vital interests, economic and political, must form the basis of the Nation's policy, and not our ideas of what constitutes international justice. No single country can move faster than the whole group toward a higher plane of international practice. However laudable an ideal it is, it cannot serve under present world conditions. It never has been the basis of successful international policy and certainly would be taken advantage of today. No country should realize this more vividly than the United States, as two episodes in her recent history well illustrate.

President Wilson by throwing this country into war sought to weight the balance in favor of peace and justice. But he ran into obstacles in his proselytizing. "Nobody has the right to get anything out of war," Wilson continued, "because we are fighting for peace, if we mean what we say, for permanent peace."

No one had any right to gain, perhaps, but they made sure they would gain. Secret treaties promising material reward brought Rumania and Italy to the side of the Allies. Russia was satisfied, France made sure of Alsace-Lorraine, Japan secured concessions. These promises and war-bred hatreds were too much for Wilson to overcome. The Allies wanted something and got it and foiled his attempt to create a new and lasting order.

A second time the United States attempted the policy of example. In the post-war years she led the world in voluntary naval disarmament. Whether the reason was a feeling of reaction against things military or isolationism or Republican economy or genuine policy of example, at least it was paraded before the world in this last guise. The result was not beneficent. Instead of following our example, Great Britain and Japan continued to build within those classes of auxiliaries not limited by the 1922 agreement. The Japanese delegation at the London Conference in 1930 successfully invoked the old principle of fixing new ratios on the basis of existing strength, and among other concessions won parity in submarines. Then feeling secure against attack in Asiatic waters, she embarked within a year on her career of aggression which continues today.

Twice burnt, therefore, our Government ought certainly to shy away from arousing Japanese hatred against us by a policy of attempting to curb her imperialistic thrust in Asia by abrogating treaties and imposing embargoes unless it is strictly to our interests to do so.

A Taxpayer's View

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
The President of the United States is getting under way another raid on the taxpayers. He has presented a new spending bill. Senator Barkley is urging "swift" Senate approval.

There has been too much "swift" legislation during the New Deal era. Let Congress for once look at this measure from the viewpoint of the taxpayers, and take time to give it the serious consideration it should have. The Senate Banking and Currency Committee figures that the practically two and a half billions demanded in this bill will create 500,000 new jobs. If that is accurate, how many billions will be required to provide jobs for our 10,000,000 unemployed? The answer is $20,000,000,000.

There is still another problem in the same class. If the $20,000,000,000, more or less, already appropriated for the relief of unemployment have made no reduction in the number of unemployed, how would you figure that two and a half billions would reduce it?

Step up, Mr. Barkley, or some other member of the Banking Committee, or even one of you Congressmen who intend to vote for this bill, and give us the solution.

My solution would be for the New Deal to take its heavy hand off the taxpayers, give business a chance to function and let us have a return to our fast-vanishing individual responsibility that was once a characteristic of our people and which gave to our citizens the highest standard of living in the world.

This new spending bill is just another attempted outrage on the taxpayers, and every Congressman who votes for it should be subject to a voters' purge in 1940.

Our Reply To Japan

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:
A heading in The Post of July 27, reads: "United States Abrogates 1911 Treaty With Japan." That is the best news I have seen in a paper for many a day—even if it is two years late!

The Tokyo officials think that the ending of this treaty is "unthinkable!" It is unthinkable to civilized peoples all over the world that a supposedly civilized nation would carry an armed invasion into a friendly country and kill a million of its people, destroy millions of dollars worth of property, devastate its principal seaports, and render 30-odd millions of its citizens homeless!

Not being satisfied with this savage butchery, this army of aggressors turned its attention to other foreigners who held long established rights in China. It is also "unthinkable" that this bold, aggressor nation would sink a ship of American ownership—the Panay!—and fire on its survivors!

It is "unthinkable" that Japan would insult and outrage American seamen and try to order about a commander of an American warship in Chinese waters! It is also pleasantly unthinkable that the American commander would obey such orders!

And what is again unthinkable, is that Great Britain's citizens, and officials, in her foreign concession there, could be slapped in the face, insulted and outraged, stripped and searched, and take it all lying down! Where are her warships?

Now that this tardy action of ours has arrived, Japan threatens to retaliate! At least one of our Senators said that an embargo of war supplies to Japan would mean war! I feel very sure that our sailors have no worry about war with Japan, even if some of our Senators have.

The Post Impressionist

Nightsong—

FROM BELOW, at this angle, the massive stone steps are rather formidable; it was by just such towering terraces of masonry, no doubt, that the builders of Thebes and Cholula achieved their effects. But narrow stairs, somehow, always look easier to climb. Most of the crowd is filtering down from the upper level; the slow, antlike columns halting and deploying at every step not already swarming with massed humanity.

It is almost an hour until the concert. The evening is windless; on the white half-dome moored at the water's edge the flags drop listlessly. Across the river the orange-red sun balances on the low, sharply silhouetted skyline for a moment like a cat on a fence, then drops quietly out of sight behind the wooded hills. A light breeze, like the last sigh of the sun, stirs the flags for a moment, then subsides.

From all directions, out on the shadowy river, canoes and motorcraft are closing in on the nither shore, converging on the great stone steps like steel particles drawn by a magnet. On the bridges that flank the Watergate heads are visible above the barricades almost to the middle. Then, suddenly, the stage is aflood with light. Singly and in groups of two or three the musicians are filing out to take their seats, tune up their instruments. In one corner a girl in a long white gown is fingering a huge harp. People are still trickling in through the ticket gates.

Eight o'clock. A man in a black coat moves swiftly to the center of the lighted stage, bows to the audience. He turns to face the orchestra, lifting his hands in a wide gesture. The musicians watch him expectantly, bows poised above the violins. A signal. Softly, ever so softly, the melody begins; by a kind of magic the secret store of lovely sound locked in the inert metal and animal tissue are loosed and poured upon the evening air.

Soft as velvet the darkness enfolds the crowd, affecting them with its beauty and mystery as much, perhaps, as the music. A dark sky, with only here and there a weak star. In front, the dark river, framed by the lights of the bridges, well-spaced close at hand, drawn into a string of bright beads by the distance. For a backdrop the doubly dark Virginia shore. The headlights of the autos moving slowly along the Arlington road are tiny, toylike; somehow they suggest the illuminated cardboard boxes children used to drag along the sidewalk in solemn twilight processions. From somewhere out in the darkness, once only, but in a key that clearly, cleanly pierces the man-made music, comes the high-pitched piping of a solitary bird.

And then the first number has ended. The man in the black coat bows briefly at the wave of applause, turns again to the orchestra, his arms lifted. A hush. And then they are playing again, not loudly, not laboring to be heard. The melody is light, playful, soaring and swooping like a flight of swallows, climbing and falling gracefully as a fountain. Here and there, near at hand in the darkness, you can see a darker shadow swaying slightly, rhythmically with the music, a head bobbing with the military movement of the violins. The lights from the opposite shore flatten out on the silk-black river, parallel ailments of quicksilver disintegrating and uniting with the agitating of the waters as a boat goes by, upstream.

Then, at last, gradually the melody begins to fade. Slowly, slowly, until it is no more than a thin, silvery thread of sound borne upward by the violins, the very shadow of a sound, and then—nothing. The audience breathes deeply and settles back.

Out on the dark waters the lights of slow moving boats have become part of the music, dreamily beautiful. Red and green lights, passing in slow procession, beautiful as the barges of the queens that bore dead Arthur to Avalon.

. . . and all

The action stately as a funeral,

In the row ahead a girl has slipped her head confidingly under the arm of her escort; he strokes it gently without turning his head. And still the grand and solemn strain swells upward from the shore.

It is the final number. In the music now there is no hint of gentleness, of sweetness. From the first note it has throbbed with a sort of disciplined violence like the step of marching armies. But now with each mounting moment it grows less restrained. Loudly, fiercely the strident brasses begin to triumph over the violins. The audience is leaning forward, eyes on the stage, a bright island of light suspended in darkness, where now the white clad arms of the musicians lift and fall in almost frantic movement. The music has become wild, anarchic. Like a sea lashing itself into fury. Great waves of clamorous sound, waves that gather up into mountains, and break, crashing upon the crowd.

And then, surprisingly, it is over. Lights flash on everywhere. People are rising, stretching cramped bodies, blinking. A thousand matches flare, feeding deferred cigarettes. Here and there a girl lifts a mirror to catch the light, powder her nose. Then slowly, lethargically, the huge subdued throng uncoils and files homeward in the darkness.

Fair Enough

'Notorious' Garner

IN CALLING MR. GARNER a poker-playing, whisky-drinking, evil old man John L. Lewis was completely ambiguous until he explained that his remarks were intended as a personal attack. Up to then they might have been construed as a boost, even as the prelude to an indorsement of Mr. Garner for President in 1940, for some of Mr. Lewis' best friends have been poker players and whisky drinkers, even gamblers and drunkards, and he has never declared any marked aversion, social or political, for individuals whose private character, measured by performance, seemed no prettier than that of the cactus Coolidge.

Mr. Garner is a 9 o'clock man who has been married to his No. 1 wife for 44 years, and if he is notorious at all it is for his domesticity. In this respect, he might be called a rank reactionary, but it would seem unwise to go before the country on that issue.

It was no secret, even before Mr. Lewis cut loose with his personalities, that Mr. Garner played perhaps the best hand of poker in Washington since the death of Indian Charlie Curtis, the old prairie jockey, and his tomato tan was the envy of many a parched and envious hypocrite in the days of prohibition and the Wayne B. Wheeler terror.

Mr. Lewis Repudiates Some Of Best Friends

HIS EXPERIMENTS in the field of the inside straight probably have been reduced in recent years, however, for it is hard to get a quorum for a game operating under a 9 o'clock limit and, on the score of whisky drinking, not even Mr. Lewis can claim to remember a time when it was necessary to call the house-dick at 2 a. m. because Mr. Garner was giving Sweet Adeline of the Internationale.

Mr. Lewis would do well to ponder whether, in attempting to discredit the Vice President, he has not repudiated some of his own best friends and as far as Mr. Garner is concerned, publicized rather endearing private traits which his backers could not gracefully mention.

As to the charge of labor baiting, inspection of the case will reveal a contention that John L. Lewis, is labor, that others claiming to represent workmen are counterfeits, and that workmen decline to yield their liberties to him and pay him an income tax, or submit under pressure, to the detriment of their rights, are either enemies of labor or faceless nonentities who don't know what is best for them and need his benign coercion. Only on that premise is it evil to oppose Mr. Lewis and his ambitions, an evil now attributed to Mr. Garner.

C. I. O. Is Accused Of Legal Extortion

MR. LEWIS' AMBITION is to recruit into the C. I. O. every working man and woman in the United States and to collect from the earnings of all those millions by legalized extortion, in the shape of the check-off, an annual tribute comparable to the Treasury's collections for the phantom fund for social security.

His organization, starting with a concealed purpose, now openly aspires to conditions which could censor out of the entire press all material hostile to the C. I. O. and suppress all books and pamphlets unfriendly to his personal leadership and the C. I. O. as labor.

With the money obtained by the income tax on the earnings of every employe in the country, the C. I. O., without assuming the obligations of government, or a mandate to govern, would seek the power which Father Coughlin strove for a few years ago when he revealed a purpose of dictating to the Government. This aim is constructively revealed in the activities and propaganda of C. I. O. members who think Mr. Garner is guilty of no evil, nor of labor-baiting, either, but only of patriotism, in anything that he may legally do to thwart the man who could be dictator.

In A Position To Collect Tribute

EVEN NOW Mr. Lewis is in a position to collect tribute from American citizens who are anti-Lewis and anti-C. I. O. and give or lend their money to the campaign funds of a party which they abhor and fear. His C. I. O. can throw them out of their jobs for refusal thus to promote his political program and his own ambitions, whatever they ultimately may be. It is not certain just what they are, but at the present stage he reveals that opposition to his vast job monopoly, his taxing power and ultimate censorship is an assault on John L. Lewis, thus an assault on labor and thus evil.

Being a severely righteous man, John L. Lewis, risen to full power, could be expected to punish such evildoers, somehow. The method would be a mere matter of detail. Hitler uses the ax and Stalin the rifle.

G. O. P. Chiefs Want Dewey Silent

Point To Chances He Would Have If He Ran in 1944

By International News Service

Some Republican high commanders were revealed yesterday as wistfully wishing that brilliant young Tom Dewey would withdraw early from the 1940 Presidential field to avoid a pre-convention battle that might lessen chances of G. O. P. success in the election.

Intent upon solidifying the G. O. P. forces soon behind either Senator Taft of Ohio or Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, these Republicans are passing the word that "party harmony will win over the faction-split Democrats."

Appreciating that it is illegal to promise jobs before an election, this G. O. P. group, however, visualizes the possibility that Dewey, already recognized as an outstanding prosecuting attorney, would become an ideal Attorney General in a Republican administration after 1940.

Wish He'd Look To 1944 Chances

With many leaders in the party willing to go along with Senator Vandenberg's demand that whoever wins the G. O. P. Presidential nomination must pledge himself to a single term, Dewey, as Attorney General, a spokesman said, would have an opportunity to build himself into a national figure by 1944.

Dewey is only 37 years old. Republicans have their eye on him, but many believe that his youth and comparatively small experience with national affairs—his experience being limited largely to that of district attorney in New York—might deter his party's chances of winning the 1940 contest.

As Attorney General for four years, Dewey would have an opportunity to become acquainted at first hand with all legal and other phases of national government. This, these Republicans said, also would afford him a vehicle to look into the record of the New Deal and the agencies created during the Roosevelt Administration that have spent billions of dollars.

The Timid Soul

Dewey's potentiality as a Republican candidate next year, however, is not underestimated by this group. Already "Dewey-for-President" clubs are being formed in many sections of the country. Within a reasonable time, the young prosecutor of New York rackets must make his intentions definitely known to his supporters.

Taft, Vandenberg Forces Are Friendly

The Taft and Vandenberg forces are on a friendly basis, but are fighting Dewey. It is understood in high Republican quarters that whichever is "out front" as the time of the convention approaches, will aim for first place on the G. O. P. ticket and the other for the second place.

This tacit understanding resulted, a spokesman said, after Taft's path was cleared during the past week, when Gov. Bricker of Ohio, apparently withdrew from the field of Presidential candidates. Bricker and Taft were both elected in the Republican sweep of Ohio last year. Bricker's friends, however, have urged the Buckeye Governor to hold himself available in the event the Taft boom deflates.

Senator Taft, meantime, is preparing to make an announcement probably within a few days, on his "availability" for the G. O. P. nomination.

Seasoned G. O. P. leaders, meantime, are looking over Representative Joseph Martin, of Massachusetts, astute leader of the House Republicans, as a likely "dark horse" in the event a tangle results between Taft, Dewey and Vandenberg.

Italian Salvage Ship Nearing Sunken Jewel Trove, Is Report

By the United Press.

Norfolk, Va., July 30.—The little Italian ship Falco at last has reached the treasure in silver bullion which lies at the bottom of the sea in the sunken steamer Merida, and may bring it to the surface soon, it was reported tonight on the waterfront.

Radio messages from the salvage ship, 65 miles off the Virginia Capes, indicated divers may begin bringing up the treasure tomorrow if there are no complicating accidents in the explosion-torn hulk of the Merida.

Previous attempts to reach the treasure—22 tons of silver and a fortune in gold certificates—lying in 220 feet of murky water have left the Merida's hull in such condition that salvage is extremely dangerous, divers reported.

Wreck May Collapse

The superstructure of the vessel, which went to the bottom the calm but foggy night of May 11, 1911, when the Merida was rammed by the S. S. Admiral Farragut, hangs over the scene of operations on the ocean floor and divers say they feared it might collapse.

Despite the danger, reports said, "hauls" are made several times daily. It was believed none of the treasure had been recovered yet, but the divers have brought up baggage and pocketbooks, and it was understood they had recovered some gold and silver coins and jewelry.

Passengers have been paid $500,000 by insurance companies for claims against valuables when the ship sank.

In addition to the silver bullion and an estimated $50,000 in gold certificates, it was believed the Merida carried jewels the Emperor Maximilian of Mexico gave the Empress Carlotta before his death in 1867.

Court Seizure Possible

Should the Falco recover the crown jewels with the other treasure, it was not known what steps would be taken next. If the Falco returns to port with the treasure, all of it would have to be declared and Maximilian heirs in London have filed claims for the treasure. There was a possibility the valuables might be impounded pending settlement.

Because of these developments, there also were reports the Falco would return here tomorrow for supplies—she is such a small ship that supplies for only two weeks can be carried—and that the ship would pick up the treasure and go to Italy without putting into port again.

Another possibility was that she might be refueled outside the port limits if she recovers the treasure tomorrow, and sail direct to her home port.

Britain Urging New Peace Plan

materials with nations having none, providing there is a thorough understanding there will be no chance in colonial sovereignty.

It was indicated that not only the Hudson-Wohlthat talks, but Britain's consideration of a plan to pour credits into Yugoslavia and Bulgaria might be the unofficial forerunners of the "common peace plan."

Authoritative British circles in London confirmed that Britain is about to take an active role in promoting "Balkan solidarity." It was anticipated British credits would be granted Yugoslavia from the $300,000,000 "war chest" voted by Parliament to aid friendly nations in making themselves strong. Britain was expected to increase purchases from Yugoslavia.

It was also reported that British credits for Bulgaria were contemplated.

Germany, it was said, has been displeased by Yugoslavia's reluctance to line up solidly with the Rome-Berlin axis and to have reduced Nazi arms deliveries to the Yugoslavs, who now must turn to Britain and France.

Million Men Put on British Battle Line

25th Anniversary of World War Outbreak Observed in Empire

By the United Press.

London, July 30.—Nearly 1,000,000 armed men were being moved into Great Britain's "far-flung battle line" in the greatest peacetime mobilization of British history tonight in a grim observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the outbreak of the World War.

Boys not yet born when Austria-Hungary marched against Serbia were in khaki and navy blue, trained by leathery veterans who saw service at Jutland, Ypres and the Dardanelles, in connection with Britain's display of her reborn fighting strength in land, sea and air maneuvers.

At the outbreak of the World War the committee of imperial defense was wondering whether it could afford to send six British divisions to France. Today 32 divisions, many of them mechanized, are being prepared to rush across the channel if war should break loose.

Conscription a Fact

It took 18 months of war to convince Britain in 1916 that conscription was needed. Now conscription is an established fact, upsetting centuries of tradition, and the first 34,000 conscripts—youths of 20—are being turned into soldiers at training camps.

In 1914 the British navy was exerting every effort to retain its superiority over the Kaiser's rapidly growing fleet. Today the British admiralty knows it enjoys a 3-to-1 superiority over Fuehrer Hitler's navy.

The home fleet, which would have the job of blockading Germany in event of war, has been on the alert for months and today was steaming from ports on the southern coast for "war stations" off Scotland, where it will be joined by the reserve fleet.

Tomorrow, 12,000 naval reservists will be called up to man the reserve fleet of 130 vessels during the "danger months" of August and September.

Last September the government waited until the darkest days of the Czecho-Slovak crisis to call up the fleet reserves. This year, however, it was decided to advance the mobilization of the reservists from August to July because of fears of what might be in Hitler's mind.

On land, meanwhile, 55,000 territorials, who correspond to the National Guard in the United States, started for training camps, bringing the strength of the "Terriers" to 410,000, double what it was a few months ago.

Black Out August 8

On August 8 and 9 half of Britain will be "blacked out" in a huge air raid test while 1,000 planes sweep in from the North Sea. Nine lines of anti-aircraft defenses have been erected between the coast and London with modern 3.7-inch guns.

On August 9, coincident with the nation-wide air raid "black out," the ships of the reserve fleet will pass in review before King George at Weymouth Bay. Then they will take to the high seas and join the home fleet in preparation for the biggest combined naval and air maneuvers ever staged by Britain.

Rumanians Fired Shots At Them, Say Hungarian

Budapest, July 30 (AP).—The official Hungarian news agency said more than 60 shots were fired by Rumanian guards into Hungarian territory at Tecso last night.

A Hungarian patrol finally returned the fire, and the shooting stopped at dawn with no casualties resulting.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

Where The East Begins

Sylvania, Pa.

WHERE DOES the East begin? Rolling down the long, straight highways all the way eastward from Wyoming, we have been debating that question, and watching for signs.

It looked like East when we saw the first big red barn, after a thousand miles of sunburned sagebrush country where the cattle roamed free and the horses, if penned at all, were in an open corral . . . But that first red barn was near Murdo, S. Dak.

There was a cool touch of Eastness in the air in the first town with shade trees (cottonwoods, to be sure) and green lawns and white-painted houses set back from the streets . . . That was away back in Douglas, Wyo., and just outside the town the prickly pear fought with the sagebrush.

It was East, definitely, in Albert Lea, Minn., when the waitress apologized for handing out silver dollars in change, saying that she had no paper money. The real West still feels more comfortable with hard money than with printed matter.

And it was East in Kenosha, Wis., when something in the air made me put on a necktie before going into a restaurant, for the first time east of California. Bryan, Ohio, was Far East; I donned a coat.

WISCONSIN looks beautifully Eastern when you come down out of the sunburned plains. West of the Rockies, and east of the Sierras (where the West ends and California begins), is the contorted desert country—no such smooth, sandy desert as pleases the Eastern imagination, but a wildly beautiful, angry, empty region, where the amazing patches of lush irrigated green, bordering with knife-edge sharpness on parched brown, only accentuate the eeriness of a land obvjously unintended for human occupation. South of the incredible Tetons and the wild Wind River Mountains, the Wyoming Rockies are no such shining wall as in Montana or Colorado—they are merely the crest of a long, slow swell that lifts the continent without obvious effort from Mississippi-level to 7,000 feet, and their eastern slopes look little different from the western. The mountain ranges marked on the map seem trivial; the plains are the colossus—the great, rolling, parched high plains, where the deer and the antelope should never have ceased roaming. Even the sunflowers this year withered long before July in fields that had once been plowed; you can still see the scars of "dry farming" on the fringes of the Dust Bowl.

The pathetic brown efforts of western Dakota farmers to grow wheat fade as you head East to yellower wheat fields, then to blue-green corn. A rest to tired eyes. East of the Missouri even the hills are gray-green rather than brown. But most of the towns still flaunt the wide treeless streets of the West. Water is still too precious to waste on mere grass-plots; and across half of South Dakota most of the trees once hopefully planted are dead.

There were stiff dead branches in the tops of Douglas, Wyo.'s cottonwoods. It was in Minnesota that we saw the first row of healthy maples shading a street. It was in Wisconsin that we saw tall, arching elms. Maples and elms made us feel at home; yet there are as nobly shaded streets in Michigan, Illinois and even in William Allen White's part of Kansas, as in any New England village.

ALL THIS "East" was Middle West. A man who snoozed in a moving automobile, and woke up almost anywhere in Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota or Wisconsin, would know at a glance that he was out of the Dakotas, Colorado or Wyoming, but he might easily persuade himself that he was in New Jersey or Pennsylvania. He would see a green land, a land of white farmhouses and big barns, of well-tended flower gardens and tree-lined roads. They would be straighter roads than in the East, but any bit of them might be lifted from a seaboard commonwealth.

That word "farmhouses" is another link between Middle West and East. West of the Missouri you never hear of "farms;" and in California any plot of land with a walnut tree on it is called a "ranch." In Wyoming a ranch hidden back in the hills, where the water flows clean from the mountains, may grow vegetables and grain, but it is still a "ranch;" the word "farm" would sound dudishly Eastern . . . In the Eastern Dakotas that change occurs; "ranches" turn into "farms."

If the snoozing traveler woke up in a filling station, his eyes might deceive him, but his ears would soon tell him whether he was in the East or Middle West. For the Middle West talks Western. From the watershed of the Mohawk westward to the Pacific, north of Mason and Dixon's line, the letter "a" rings clear and flat, and the good letter "r" is honored to its burry full; but only in Philadelphia does "r" reach the Atlantic seaboard. (The South, of course, drops its "r's" as conscientiously as New England and the Hudson Valley. Traveling Westward, we listened carefully. The soft Southern drawl lasted west of Fort Worth; the Pecos River seemed to be the Southwestern frontier of the "r" as it once was the frontier of the law. But El Paso talks Western, rather than Southern, and I don't mean West'n. I mean Western.)

What essence marks off Middle West from East I still don't quite know. The flatness of the land spells something to the eye, but parts of New Jersey are as flat as anything in Ohio or Wisconsin; the Mississippi River Valley at Prairie du Chien might be the Delaware, except for the majesty of the stream.

WE TALKED it over; we finally concluded frivolously that you could best tell the difference in a restaurant. Where a T-bone steak costs four times as much as hamburger, that's East.

Major Bills In Danger

By Ernest K. Lindley

Record For Dizziness

THE LAST DAYS of the session of any legislature seldom reveal those qualities in our form of government which are celebrated in textbooks and Fourth of July orations. It looks, however, as if the wind-up of this session of Congress would set a record for dizziness surpassing even the crazy period around June 30 of this year.

The Hatch bill, noble in purpose and sound at the heart, was trimmed with amendments which raise grave questions of public policy, wholly apart from the constitutional "ifs" (which may not prove to be very substantial). As the bill stands it is a greater joy to the professional politicians who want to prevetn the nomination of a Progressive Democrat in 1940 than to many of the friends of good government who want to curb the power of the professional politicians.

The works finance bill is floundering through clouds of oratorical hokum. Take Senator George, as an example. Last summer when the President was opposing his renomination, Senator George and his friends insisted that the Senator had been a supporter of the New Deal. They pointed to his voting record to prove it, and said that the President was sore only because George had opposed his Supreme Court plan. A few weeks ago George voted to boost the agricultural appropriation bill about three hundred million dollars above the budget estimate, and more recently he voted to give Senators another clerk all around. Now George professes to be panicky about the effect on Federal finances of a conservative set of proposals for self-liquidating loans. An ordinary observer is entitled to suspect that the current outpourings of George and many of his colleagues do not originate in high-principled concern for the state of the Federal budget.

Conferees Hold Up Security Revisions

THE SOCIAL SECURITY amendments are deadlocked in conference and there is real danger that no action will be taken on them. This after months of detailed committee work in both houses. Neither the Senate nor the House version of the amendments could be called streamlined. Both are rather botchy, although well above the standards of the present Congress. (Compared to the WPA appropriation bill, they are perfection.) Both sides have taken firm positions in conference, and the result may well be nothing.

If there is no action, old-age insurance taxes will go up January 1, in accordance with existing law—at a cost to employers and employes of about $275,000,000 during 1940. The present rate of 1 per cent could be "frozen" by a special resolution. But the bill, in both versions, contains other important changes.

If there is no action some $110,000,000 will be bottled up in the old-age insurance fund which otherwise would be paid out to the aged and their survivors under the new liberalized plan. This figure is based on the more liberal Senate plan. The House plan would put out only $42,000,000 more than under the existing law.

Millions Will Be Denied Protection

EVEN MORE IMPORTANT than the money, and its effect as a stimulant to business, is the fact that if no action is taken protection will be denied to millions of citizens. Wage salary earners with wives and young children will lack the protection offered by the new survivor insurance. About 1,300,000 workers—mostly seamen and bank employes—who are now outside the insurance system would remain out.

There are benefits at stake, too, for employers under the proposed changes in the unemployment compensation system.

More money for public health, maternal and child care, and crippled children is involved. So is a better break for dependent children—the new amendments put Federal aid for them on a 50-50 basis and increase the allowance per child.

More Generous Aid To Aged At Stake

FINALLY, more generous aid for indigent old people is at stake. This is one of the main points of issue between the House and the Senate. The House bill increases the maximum Federal grant to $20—which helps a few wealthy States—but otherwise does nothing for the indigent old people. The Senate adopted the Connally plan, under which the Federal Government would put up $10 to go with the first $5 put up by the State.

The Connally plan would bring up the average of old-age assistance although it is not as well devised as the Social Security Board's scheme for variable grants (ignored by both houses) and creates some new difficulties of its own. But the House conferees seem to be dead set against it, chiefly because it would increase the cost to the Federal Government by about $120,000,000 a year.

Such is the state of one of the most important pieces of legislation before this Congress. The deadlock appears to be unbreakable unless the people who are affected—which means almost everybody—promptly take bricks in hand and heave them at the conference committee.

France, Britain Map Plans to Defend Poland

Blockade of Germany, Long-Range Aerial Offense Seen as Key

By William Hillman.

International News Service Staff Correspondent.

London, July 30.—A defense of Poland by Great Britain and France, one of the thorniest military problems in history, would involve:

British naval blockade of Germany.

Long-range British naval assistance.

Long-range aerial bombing support by Great Britain and France.

Short-range aerial combat support by British and French interceptor planes.

British and French mechanized support, to be routed over Rumania through the Dardanelles, defended by Turkey to the Black Sea.

Black Sea patrol and escort and Mediterranean escort by British and French navies for routing of mechanized forces and supplies to Poland over Rumania.

The Polish high command to be co-ordinated with the British and French high command.

The details of this defense plan are military secrets.

Outlined by Ironside

They have been outlined by Great Britain's most brilliant strategist, Maj. Gen. Sir Edmund Ironside, inspector general of British overseas forces, and Poland's Marshal Smigly-Rydz. Further consultations are to take place between the general staffs of Great Britain, France and Poland.

Should the triple alliance between Britain, France and Russia be concluded, Russia would be expected:

To mass tanks along the Russian frontier and push into Poland on the outbreak of the war—although Poland still hedges against Russian troops on Polish territory.

To supply other mechanized units and long range planes.

To help Black Sea patrol and escort.

Greater Problems in West

These are the channels and main lines by which operations in the east would probably follow. Operations in the west as a result of war breaking out over Poland would involve other and greater problems.

An important question conditioning and modifying operations in the west would be:

Will Italy remain neutral in the beginning, if Germany decides to move against Poland over Danzig and the Corridor?

As Italy decides to remain neutral or join Germany in the early or later stages of war, so will strategy in the west be modified with modifications in the east. But allied operations in the east will involve action along the lines outlined.

France Builds '2d Navy' of 340,000 Tons

Aims at Battle Fleet Of 750,000 Tons, 4th In Size in World

By the United Press.

Paris, July 30.—A powerful "second navy" for France, consisting of 83 warships totaling 340,000 tons, is taking form rapidly and will be added to the fleet charged with maintaining French supremacy in the western Mediterranean, Navy Minister César Campinchi said today in an interview.

Campinchi said the ships range from battleships and airplane carriers to submarines and the world's fastest destroyers.

France is aiming at a fleet of 750,000 tons, he explained, to consolidate her position as fourth-ranking world naval power which she is determined to hold at all costs against Italian and German challenges.

To meet the threat of the dictators' mass construction of submarines, France will concentrate on this arm until she has a modern fleet of 100 subsurface "wasps," the minister said.

Every private and national shipyard in France is working day and night and commercial shipping has been asked to make new sacrifices in order to speed up naval orders and bring about complete rejuvenation of the French fleet by early 1942, Campinchi said.

"In 1912 and 1921, as in 1939, the French navy aimed to reach a total of 800,000 to 900,000 tons, which corresponds to its actual needs for defense of communications and maritime frontiers," he explained.

Campinchi said the World War caused drastic revision of the 1912 schedule and that the navy in 1918 had been reduced to 652,000 tons, a large proportion of which was worn out and had to be scrapped.

Elmer On Horse Doping

Arrests have been made in another horse doping case. The horse, it develops, crossed the alleged dopers, by spitting out a doped carrot, and won the race. This, coupled with other similar instances, convinces Elmer Twitchell that race horses in this country are rebelling against a dope diet.

"Yes sir," insisted Mr. Twitchell, "the nags appear to be fed up on the stuff, and I don't blame 'em. Even a horse will finally demand a change in his food."

"When a horse refuses a carrot, it is very significant," continued Elmer. "A carrot is feed-box caviar. When a horse will pass up a carrot he is pretty sick of carrots and when he is sick of carrots there is a reason. Personally I think the race horses of this country have been fed all the dope they can stand.

"The ones I bet on, however, must still be eating carrots. In fact I am convinced by their performances that they are eating nothing else."

Mr. Twitchell put down his racing chart and continued. "It is good to know that here and there a horse spits out a doped vegetable. It may mean that the horses have decided that if they don't want to be drugged they have to stop it themselves and not depend on the track veterinarians and racing officials. I thought I would enter horse racing a while back and bought a stable, but it was a failure. Every nag I bought turned out to be a drug addict.

"They just had to have it in some form, as a result of a long-standing habit. I had a horse called Dreamy Duke, for instance, and he wouldn't even allow us to put a saddle on him until he had been given a pill or two. At times we couldn't get him to the post without sending a boy ahead of him with a small black bag. Dreamy Duke thought it was a medical kit.

"I remember one time the Duke had a race won (he didn't know what he was doing, of course) when he suddenly jumped over the fence and ran out of the park. Where do you suppose we found him? In a drug store!

"I had another horse called Powder Pete. He was just as bad. He had been fed so many doped carrots that he used to swallow the dope and spit out the carrot. My jockey couldn't do much with him, so I tried doping him, too."

"Did you ever win a race?" Mr. Twitchell was asked.

"One," concluded Elmer. "I gave a big carrot dinner. The horse, the jockey and the trainer all ate doped carrots. So did I. We won that race by 14 lengths from a field that included War Admiral, Seabiscuit and Fighting Fox."

"What do you mean by 'we,' Mr. Twitchell?" I asked.

"The jockey and I," replied Elmer. "I never did know what ever became of the horse and the trainer."

Van Nuyses Give Farm Dinner for Friends

Congressional Group Enjoys Pre-Farewell Party at 150-Acre Estate Near Vienna, Va.; Fried Chicken, Corn on Cob Feature Menu

By Elizabeth Henney.

As a prefarewell to the present session of Congress, and probably with the fervent hope that there will really be an adjournment soon, Senator and Mrs. Frederick Van Nuys entertained a few of their Congressional friends last evening at an old-fashioned country dinner.

The scene was Moorefield, a spacious old farm which is the newly acquired home of Senator and Mrs. Van Nuys. It is about a mile from Vienna, Va. The stately white house, built on a knoll in the rolling grounds, is fully 150 years old, and the old oaken bucket hanging by the well in the front garden plunges one immediately into the atmosphere of colonial days.

From the lovely wide, screened veranda at the back of the house, the guests looked out over 150 acres of rolling farm land, completely stocked with many prize heifers, stables, gardens and cultivated acreage. A self-sustaining unit, the farm furnished the meal for the guests, from the fresh corn on the cob and fried chicken to the butter, milk and fresh vegetables.

Guests included Senator and Mrs. Warren R. Austin, Senator and Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Senator and Mrs. Walter F. George, Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Mrs. Clark is out of town), Senator and Mrs. James F. Byrnes and Senator and Mrs. Josiah W. Bailey.

Also there were Senator Peter Goelet Gerry (Mrs. Gerry has already left for their home in Rhode Island for the summer), Senator and Mrs. Harry Flood Byrd, Senator and Mrs. Guy M. Gillette, Senator and Mrs. Wallace H. White, jr., Senator Alva B. Adams, Joseph Tumulty and Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Kremer.

Fine Old Estate At Its Best Now

The estate is at its best now with the flowers in a riot of blossoms, giant old trees to give plenty of shade and the deep green accent of the old, old boxwood hedges, and Senator and Mrs. Van Nuys plan to spend their entire time there once Congress adjourns. Mrs. Van Nuys is there continually now, except for the brief time it takes to drive her husband to his office.

Also enjoying the farm with them this summer is Senator and Mrs. Van Nuys' son, William Van Nuys, who will return in the fall to resume his studies at St. John's.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Suffering From Nervous Tension, Woman Executive, Nearing 60, Asks How to Relax

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am not far from 60 years old; have a responsible office position with several assistants, and more work than the staff can handle. For the last few years I have been suffering attacks of migraine headaches (according to the doctor's diagnosis) and on many days am very tense, at the back of the neck and top of the head.

I want to know how to relax and overcome these attacks. I am not the worrying kind, am naturally cheerful and happy, and like my work very much. All members of the family, on my father's side, are very nervous in temperament, but all live to a ripe old age in spite of this handicap. But there must be some intelligent way of overcoming this affliction. Can you give me the names of some non-technical books that I may read which would help?

One other request—During the week of June 8 you discussed the problem of a homesick bride. I have a young friend in the same predicament and want to get the exact date of your reply, so that I can get a copy to give to her.

OFFICE WORKER.

Broaden Social Horizon

DEAR OFFICE WORKER: When one's nervous system starts crying out, "Let down or crack up," it usually means that one's mental energies are jaded and overtired as the result of unduly prolonged preoccupation with one isolated interest or routine occupation. It is the signal to change one's mental and social pace, by tapering off one's concentration on the lone interest, and switching one's attention to a variety of soothing or stimulating counter-interests.

I note by your signature that you are an unmarried woman. The unmarried woman who holds a position of responsibility in the business world has greater need than her married sister to avoid the pitfalls of monotony—since she is without a life partner to share her psychic burdens at the day's end, to be a pace-maker in her social life. Bound by convention to a rather rigid pattern of behavior, she is little acquainted with those playful escapes from the artificial restraints of modern existence which are so casually claimed by the married woman and often by the unmarried man. The constant relaxing warmth of shared love and spontaneous laughter with intimates over trifles is virtually unknown to her.

I once heard a doctor discuss this type of situation. Members of his profession, he said, are well acquainted with the problem of the single woman who is, for the most part, constantly and quite unconsciously on guard, emotionally and socially—thus carrying an unremitting burden of psychic tension which may result in just such symptoms as those you describe. Medical science sometimes prescribes certain sedatives—in carefully measured doses—for relieving such tension and permitting the sufferer a necessary period of restful relaxation which a better ordered life would automatically provide. But the better and more lasting remedy, of course, will be found in channeling natural releases for such tension.

Since you like your work "very much," and are no doubt wedded to your job in lieu of a husband, it is altogether probable that you live with its responsibilities, figuratively speaking, around the clock, year in and year out. And now that you are accountable for more work than the staff can handle, the job may have become a subterranean source of 24-hour-a-day worry, which you do not—or cannot—throw off, simply because you have made your work your main interest in life.

What you need, no doubt, is one or more counter interests of comparable fascination, to take your mind off both the job and yourself. Do you own and drive a car, I wonder? I happen to know two unmarried professional women who escaped from the middle-aged doldrums by taking to the open road—of week-ends, holidays and during annual vacation—at the wheel of their own newly acquired cars. Do you swim, and if you don't, would you have the courage to try to learn? A young professional woman of my acquaintance, who sometimes suffers (like you) from migraine headaches, tells me that swimming exhilarates her, mentally and physically, as no other sport does.

I know several women who took up painting, as a hobby, when well into middle age. It is paying them tremendous dividends of pleasure. I have known others who became fascinated in studying and collecting antique furniture, glassware, prints, etc. Nature study is highly recommended by Donald Culrose Peattie in the August issue of Readers' Digest, and in the same periodical Dr. Alexis Carrel has a splendid article (the third in a series) telling how good health and joie de vivre are established and maintained. Correct diet, regular habits and consistent outdoor exercise are emphasized.

One or several of the following books might throw helpful light on your problem: "Outwitting Your Nerves," by J. H. Jackson and A. S. Salisbury; "The Return to Religion," by Dr. Henry C. Link (not an orthodox preachment, by any means, but a book which stresses the necessity of creating a well-rounded pattern of social activity); "You Must Relax," by Dr. Edmund Jacobson, and Dr. David Seabury's three books, "Helping Yourself to Happiness," "How to Worry Successfully" and "The Art of Selfishness."

The column concerned with the personality problem of the homesick bride was published on June 9. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Best Cure for Fair Feet: Don't Hurry

If you're going to the World's Fair—New York or San Francisco—remember the official warning: "Don't rush and don't try to crowd too much into a few hours, for the fair is big enough to get you down if you do." There is so much to see and do, many a sightseer finds herself footsore and weary at the end of the day. "Oh-o-o, my feet hurt!" is the theme song of many a fair visitor.

For that matter, even non-fair-goers know what it is to suffer with puffiness and swelling on a hot summer day. Tired, aching and swollen feet, however, can be soothed by a simple home treatment. First bathe the feet in alternate warm and cold water baths to which common table salt has been added. Then after the feet are thoroughly dried, rub the swollen portions gently with a soothing glycerine-containing lotion.

For Honeymoon or Campus Wear

For honeymoon or back to college, the handsome two-piece suit modeled by Miss Izetta Jewel, jr. (above), fits the occasion. Made of sheer beige wool, the basic dress has an all-around stitched, pleated skirt that is essentially youthful. The short fitted basque jacket, lined with rayon-satin, has a collar of brown beaver mouton. The front of the muff is also trimmed with the same fur

Diet Important To Dental Health: U. S. Leads World

By Ida Jean Kain

EVEN WITH NINE out of every ten children suffering from dental disease, this country ranks No. 1 in dental health and, by comparison, the teeth of people in other countries seem deplorably bad. In Halifax, Nova Scotia, the other day, I could not help noticing the children on the streets. I did not see one child with really good teeth.

From its extensive surveys, the Greater New York Bureau of Dental Information is inclined to place the bulk of the blame for poor teeth on poor nutrition. But nutrition takes in everything from minerals and vitamins to sunshine.

Diet Plays Vital Role

The vital role diet plays in dental health has been demonstrated beyond any doubt. In the few years that the English school children have been supplied with milk, there has been a remarkable improvement in the condition of their teeth. Milk is chiefly valuable for its high calcium content but it also contains phosphorus, both minerals essential to good bones and teeth.

The explanation of the exceptionally healthy teeth of children coming from the southern European countries, however, is found in the sunshine. The action of the sun's rays on the skin forms Vitamin D and this vitamin is essential to the utilization of calcium. It might be that the prevalence of fog during the spring and fall would cut down on the natural sunlight to such an extent that the teeth of the Nova Scotians would be affected. The same thing is true of England and parts of our own country.

The remedy for lack of sunshine is a dietary one . . . if you cannot get enough sun, you can take codliver oil or one of the concentrates such as viosteral or haliver oil. Adults should have a pint of milk a day. Growing children need three to four glasses and either plenty of sun or a teaspoon of codliver oil daily.

Vitamin C Important

Besides Vitamin D, two others—A and C—are involved in dental health. Vitamin A strengthens resistance to infection and promotes a healthy condition of the tissues. It is contained in butter, egg yolks, cream, whole milk, codliver oil, carrots and spinach. Vitamin C is so important that the teeth are very quickly affected by a shortage. This vitamin protects the soft tissues of mouth and gums. Richest sources of C are the citrus fruits, oranges, grapefruit and lemons, which may be canned or fresh. Pineapple juice and tomato juice, either canned or fresh, are also good sources, and the plebian cabbage is very high in C. For an adequate intake of this vitamin you should have daily: one-half glass of orange or grapefruit juice, or one glass of pineapple juice, or one and one-half glasses of tomato juice.

Dentists tell us we are losing our teeth because we eat too many soft foods. In short, we do not make use of our teeth, and what we do not use we lose. There should be some hard foods in the menu, such as hard breads and rolls and the tough skins of baked potatoes, to exercise the teeth and strengthen the tissues of the mouth.

Eye Refreshment Tip From Actress

Hollywood, Calif.—Eye-refreshers, picked up by Gale Page while working under brilliant Technicolor lights are equally effective for eyes strained in the glaring sun.

Gale begins the treatment by bathing her eyes in a lotion which has been slightly warmed. She holds a cupful of the eyewash to each eye for a minute. A five minute rest period follows in a darkened room, during which time her eyes are covered with astringent-soaked cotton. Finally, a gentle rotary massage, from a point just beyond the outside corners of the eye up into the hairline, is comforting to tired eyes.

Lewisohn Stadium Records Shattered By Crowd of 22,000 the Night Lily Pons and Her Husband, Kostelanety, Appear Together

OUR SYMPHONIC music under the stars is following its usual twisting course this summer. The Lewisohn Stadium, where the Philharmonic plays these nights, has a normal seating capacity of about 18,000. When there is a comparatively unknown conductor waving the stick through a routine program, there may be as few as 5,000 in the pews. But let a famous soloist or special attraction be announced and the place is jam-packed.

ALICE HUGHES

Up to this summer, the biggest event of the stadium has always been the all-Gershwin program, for the late and deeply lamented George is forever a New York idol. But not long ago all Lewisohn records were shattered to slivers, by the magnetic drawing power of a tiny coloratura soprano and her baton-wielding mate, also in a small size. The night Lily Pons and her husband, Andre Kostelanetz, performed their joint arts at the stadium will live long in local memory.

Lily, of course, is a crowd-puller and pleaser, and Kosty is nationally famous by way of radio. But experts opine that the real excitement was caused by the fact that the first time in our history a husband conducted the orchestra while his attractive grand opera wife sang the pieces. Whatever the actual cause, no less than 22,000 people piled into the stadium, sitting, standing or lying down, while hundreds had to be turned back at the gate. To make it better, Petite Pons was in fine voice, and it was a wondrous night. Each is good alone—as a team they seem supercolossal.

"Madame Lily" is now happier than she has ever been in her life. She has her Kosty, she rejoices in her country home at Silvermine, Conn., and she never was in better voice. Yes, the 104 pounds of Gallic dynamite is at her very best right now, and the high point of her summer will be her annual appearance at the Hollywood Bowl on August 8.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—We were modestly excited by the close approach of the red planet Mars to our own whirlwing globe, and Hall, looking through the family field glasses, said he could see Orson Welles as plain as anything.

Good-by July, hello, August. Be cool about everything, will you?

ILKA CHASE, the peppery actress who was a hit in "The Women," has come home from Hollywood with blond hair, after years as a brunette. She says she sort of likes it, and I wonder what her mama, editor of one of the most famous fashion mags, thinks of her Ilka.

Why Men Leave Home

"George! The most amazing thing happened to me today! It's perfectly incredulous!"

"What was it?"

Well, you know I never in my life went downtown and wore my old clothes that I didn't run on to somebody——"

"Who did you see?"

"I'm coming to that. Well, you know I just thought, 'Now it's surely such a bad day that I won't see a soul,' and so I just put on that old chartreuse print—you know the one with the red-ingote. Now I never did like redingotes anyway——"

"I know, but what happened?"

Well, just as I got off the bus—and, by the way, guess who I saw on the bus? Jim Walrus! He was talking to some blonde woman—I don't know who she was, but anyway she didn't see me——"

"What's that got to do with it?"

"Nothing. Only I just wanted to tell you before I forgot. Well, anyway, this whole thing was simply weird——"

"Yes, yes. Well, what happened?"

"Well, I got off the bus and I crossed the street and was walking along looking in the shop windows—you know it's perfectly amazing how many of those bustle dresses they're showing——"

"Go on with your story."

"Well, I was walking along and who on earth should I run into but Leona Guppey."

"Leona Guppey?"

"Yes. You know that Jane Guppey I told you about that I went to school with?"

"I thought you said Leona Guppey."

"Well, Leona's Jane's sister. I tell you who they are. Old Mrs. Guppey was a Mackerel. They had a big paper box factory back home and everything. Then there was another Guppey girl—Gladys. There was a lot of talk about her. Now, who was it she married?"

"Well, go on. What happened?"

"I'll get to that in a minute. I'm just telling you about the Guppeys, so you'll understand. I wish I could think who that man was Gladys Guppey married. Well, anyway, Leona Guppey—her name is Tooner now. She married——"

"Well, what about her?"

"Well, anyway, she's awfully cute and wears cute clothes and has a darling little bungalow out in Geranium Heights. The Guppeys were really very lovely people—you know they were the kind that were used to things. You could just tell that. Of course, now, Gladys——"

"Well, go on."

"I am in a minute. Now, while I was talking to Leona Guppey—I mean Tooner—honestly she simply looked darling in a new little black jersey and a little beret, and here was me in this old redingote——"

"Say, are you going to tell this story or not?"

"I'm getting to it in just a minute. Of course, if you don't want to hear it——"

"Oh, go on."

"Well, while I was talking to Leona a man and woman who were standing by one of the shop windows—she was terribly ordinary looking——"

"What about them?"

"Well they got in a loud argument. It was about some other woman. Now, you'd really have to know Leona Guppey to appreciate this. You know the Guppeys——"

"For heavens sakes, leave out the Guppeys."

"Don't be so cross. Well, anyway, this strange woman all of a sudden came rushing over to us—US, mind you. Leona was just petrified——"

"Yes, go on."

"Now, you see the Guppeys have all been very conventional people. That is, except Gladys. Oh, say, I remember who she married. It was an Antelope—Bill Antelope—Wait! Wait! George! Where are you going?"

"Down to the corner!"

Mexican Red Beans Rare Delicacy

El Paso, Tex. (AP).—Fashions in smuggling have changed, too.

Time was when the smuggler prided himself on his wares and he dealt in rare old wines, gems, spices and fine cloths.

Now, border patrolmen report, some of the fellows will risk their necks to get a cargo of red beans across the Rio Grande duty free.

These particular beans are frijoles, a delicacy that makes the mouths of American bean lovers water. Epicures say there is as much difference between the American red bean and the Mexican frijole as between gold and brass.

French Provincial Furniture Smart In Small Cottage

It's a losing game to try to look like something you aren't. That goes for houses as well as people. A five-room frame cottage has its own particular kind of charm, but it is no satin damask and formal drawingroom sort of business. In order to make the most out of what you have, it is smarter to play up the essential characteristics of a small cottage. The average American woman instinctively does this, which explains the popularity of colonial maple—it fits so graciously into the friendly, unpretentious cottage typical of a familiar American town.

There are other styles of furniture, however, that are equally at home in a sottage scene. French provincial pieces, important in the fashion picture just now, are perfect for use in a small cottage of five or six rooms. They lend themselves to many fresh and interesting decorative backgrounds and yet, for all their forthright simplicity, they have a poise and refinement that gives them dignity for use together or with American furniture.

We are thinking now of a French provincial living-dining room recently designed for a newly built American home. The mantel wall was covered with a toile de juoy patterned chintz in green or cream, while the other three walls of the room were cream with scroll-panels painted in light green. The same chintz used on the wall was quilted to cover several pieces of upholstered furniture, while other pieces were in a provincial plaid covering of soft coloring.

Make Vacations an Adventure

ARE YOU tired of vacations as alike as peas in a pod? Do you wonder if you can afford to go somewhere different—really travel.

The answer's yes, you can go to exciting places—cheaply! There's the "frozen North"—glittering Alaskan glaciers and icy peaks in a setting of lush green! Take a 7 to 8 day round trip from Seattle, sail through the magnificent "Inside Passage" to Skagway—all for $65.

And how about "side ventures" when you are in New York for the World's Fair? A four-day bus-and-boat trip to Montreal, Quebec and return costs only $25—and whisks you into the heart of Old France in America.

Or go tropical! Take a motor schooner at Tampa, Fla., sail the bright Caribbean to British Honduras. The round trip takes about two weeks, costs $40.

And in five days you speed from San Francisco over the blue Pacific to Hawaii—land of ukeles, hula dancers, surf riding. Round-trip fares start at $170.

Low rates to Europe, too, begin early in August. And time on a month's vacation to see the English Shakespeare country, take in the sights of Paris and London or bicycle through Brittany. And if you join a group of the ŠITA or some similar travel organization you enjoy pleasant company, save money.

Dozens of other exciting, modest-priced trips are given in our new 40-page booklet, "Low-Cost Travel by Land and Sea." The Rev. P. L. Mitchell Speaks

Arlington—"You Must Be Born Anew" was the topic taken by the Rev. Perry L. Mitchell at the Clarendon Baptist Church at the morning service.

"Many years ago," he said, "a religious philosopher wrote: 'He that winneth souls is wise.' If that statement is true, one wonders how many in our churches have been made wise through evangelism. Writing on what impressed him during a recent trip to Russia, Basel Russell told of hearing some 10,000 young people singing, "We are changing the world, we are changing the world." They showed by the enthusiasm of their singing that they believed they had what it took to change the world.

"The message of the church has to do with changing a world, changing a social order, changing the use of things. It makes bad men good and good men better. It teaches men to use the good things of this world for the good of the world. A change of this kind is much needed today. Without the message of the church this change cannot be brought to pass. A church that does not meet the surrounding opportunities cannot be trusted. This world must be brotherized or it will become brutalized. Greater loyalties can be reached only as we are true to lesser loyalties.

"Roads, radio and refrigerators all contribute to the comfort of an improving world, but the change most needed is in man himself. This change is made only when Christ gets hold of the heart and the emotions, and claims man's will as his own. These men, impelled by their changed thought and conduct, launch out to change a world, not by a program, but by the power of a new life.

"When Eve reached for an apple Adam probably pulled down the limb so she could pick it and then put the blame on her. When the church pulls down spiritual truths so that they can be lived by an unbelieving world she has no right to shift responsibility. When the church becomes less popular in political and social areas and more recognized in that which is spiritual her influence will become more Christlike. The world is looking to the church for a life-changing message. 'He that winneth souls is Wise.'"

2 in Hagerstown Quizzed on Source Of Bogus Money

Secret Service agents yesterday sought the source of $1,090 in counterfeit $1 bills found in the automobile of two men arrested a week ago on forgery charges and held in the Hagerstown, Md., jail.

According to Washing on County Sheriff Joseph D. Baker, the two men were quizzed at length by "T-men" yesterday, after which it was indicated that the prisoners had not made the bills themselves.

The suspects were arrested July 21 in Baltimore. They are Alvin Myers, 34, of Point of Rocks, Md., and Clarence Wellingham, 30, of Round Hill, Va. They were held for $2,000 local and $15,000 Federal bond. Sheriff Baker said their arrest followed passing of half a dozen forged checks in Hagerstown, and that detainers had been issued for them by Frederick County, Md., and Leesburg, Va., authorities.

Takoma People Object to Dogs In Police Station

Mayor John R. Adams of Takoma Park was notified last night by a petition of nearly 50 residents that they were tired of having the police station used as a doghouse.

For some years Poundmaster Charles Downey has kept stray dogs in a shed adjoining the police station. If not claimed within three days the animals are sent to the Animal Rescue League.

The petition, presented by Frank F. Eastman, complained against the barking of the dogs at night and asked that the pound be transferred outside the town limits. Protest also was registered against the "unsightly conditions" around the station due to the parking trucks and other road equipment used by the Municipal Department of Public Works.

Decrease in Pneumonia Deaths In Maryland Laid to New Drugs

Sulfapyridine Use Against Illness Grows; Number of Cases Increase as Fatalities Drop; Infants Also Have Better Chance to Live

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, July 30.—The State health department announced today that "a significant decrease" in pneumonia leaths the first half of this year might be due to science's new weapons in the fight on the disease.

"It is too early," the report said, "to draw conclusions regarding the effectiveness of the newer methods of treatment of the disease, but a drop of this sort in spite of an increase in the cases reported is decidedly encouraging."

Within the last year doctors have begun to combat pneumonia with sulfapyridine, a drug similar to sulfanilamide. This treatment is less expensive than the serum treatment, begun some years ago, which has also brought down the pneumonia death rate.

The department said that during the first six months of this year there were 2,609 cases reported, in comparison with 2,129 during the first half of last year. Deaths this year were 813, compared with 856 in the same period last year.

Dr. R. H. Riley, director of the department, said that the epidemic of measles which produced 14,000 cases last winter had apparently disappeared and that the first half of this year was "especially favorable to children and young people."

"There were fewer births this year than during the first six months of 1938, but there were also fewer infant deaths," he added. "There were 716 deaths under one year during the first six months of 1939 and 802 during the corresponding period of 1938. Or, to put it differently, up to the end of June this year there were 52 deaths in relation to each thousand births; last year during the same period there were 57 deaths among each thousand children born."

Bethesda Fire Volunteers Incorporate

Musgrove Backers Plan Unit to Rival Bargagni's; Claim Funds From County

Incensed over the ouster of their former chief, Hiram Musgrove, when the department was put on a "semipaid" basis, Bethesda volunteer firemen have incorporated and are proceeding with plans to establish a rival fire company with Musgrove in command.

The State Tax Commission already has granted a charter to the group, which has taken the name of the Volunteer Fire Department of Bethesda, Inc. At the first meeting of the board of directors yesterday, Samuel T. Robertson was nominated for president and Musgrove for chief.

Musgrove was chief of the present department for 4½ years until its recent reorganization, when A. J. Bargagni, former Washington fire official, was placed in command, over protests of the volunteers. Bargagni was appointed by the Bethesda Fire Board, executive branch of the present department.

Can't Get Tax Funds

The newly incorporated group claims it will be entitled to allocations of funds from Montgomery County when fire equipment is obtained. The law, they said, provides for grants of $500 annually to volunteer companies for each piece of equipment they possess. The present company, it was contended, will not be eligible for these allocations because it is not strictly a volunteer unit.

The volunteers, however, were forced to admit that they would not be able to share in a 10-cent fire tax collected in the Bethesda area, because under the law, this money goes to the Bethesda Fire Board, which has authority to say where and how it shall be spent.

The volunteers will meet again tonight to draw up by-laws and make further plans for the new fire station. They plan to raise money by holding a carnival next month.

Pugh Is Group's Counsel

James E. Pugh, former Montgomery County State's Attorney, represented the volunteer group in the incorporation proceedings. Incorporators include Alexander Britton, William Collier, Gordon Dodson, Sumpter Embrey, William Flack, Robert Freauman, Roland Hargett, Robert E. Hopper, Morrissey W. Swilling, Albert Henley, Francis Gloyd, Rodney Jenkins, Frank Leahy, Shelton Jenkins, LeRoy Lochte, John Murdock, Laurence Lochte, Charles Murphy, Gaither Musgrove, Hiram Musgrove, John Oldfield, James Peake, Earle Poole, Andrew Pugh, Samuel T. Robertson, Frank G. Stone, Louis P. Stone, G. Stone and Reginald Looker.

Directors are Alban D. Caldwell, Clinton Dowling, Robe. W. King, James W. Baldwin, Hiram Musgrove, Frank Stone, Robertson, Embry, and Flack.

Success Lies In Faith, Says Rev. Mr. Dodge

The Washington Post Bureau, 907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va. Phone Temple 3787 Delivery Service, Phone Alex. 247.

Even though honest effort may end in failure, eventual success lies in faith, the Rev. Ryland T. Dodge, pastor of Temple Baptist Church, said yesterday in his morning sermon. He took his text from the nineteenth verse of the seventh chapter of St. Matthew: "Why could not we cast him out?"

The disciples failed, although they honestly tried and were chosen disciples, recognized ambassadors, and had been commanded to do the work of healing, he said. It was "a conscious failure," he added, "without any redeeming feature that they knew of . . . it was a feeble failure observed by the multitude," but later they did succeed.

Honesty Above Success

He observed that no political party glories in failure, neither did the disciples, neither do the churches. It was humiliating, and he stated it is humiliating for His church to work under the odds and handicaps of today.

He stressed that it is better to be more concerned about honesty than success, that "we have nothing to do with success, but we have all to do with honesty." Many people, or most of us, fail to take the proper aim, we shoot at random, we aim at nothing and of course we hit nothing."

He said that sometimes failures which seem mysterious to men are due to the fact that the pulpit is out of harmony with the spirit of Gospel. Even ministers will touch on the issues without having a personal belief; the pulpit may backslide as well as the pews, no position in the church can possibly screen one from that fatal tendency.

Prepares Building Program

He said victories can only be obtained through prayer and fasting and to be willing to succeed one must be willing to obey His commands. That "if ye have faith, nothing shall be impossible unto you."

The Temple Baptist Church is preparing to inaugurate a building program, as the congregation has grown so in the past few years the present edifice is inadequate. On September 22 a "Fellowship Supper" will be featured, when gifts saved in a six-month period will be presented, looking to clearing the debt on the present church with the object of a larger building. His sermon was to illustrate to his congregation the need for faith to succeed in their ambition for larger quarters.

The Stonewall Jackson Council Service Troop had its second inspection Thursday morning and received a flag. Several of the Scouts took part in the safety-monitor drills led by Maj. Allan Smith, former New York State police instructor.

Rev. Mr. Loftis Preaches in Silver Spring

Assails Prevalance Of 'Street Carnival Religion' Today

The Rev. J. Wesley Loftis, pastor of the Silver Spring Baptist Church, decried the modern tendency toward "street carnival" religion in his sermon yesterday on "Christ at Work Today in the World."

"Too many of us have 'street carnival religion,'" he asserted. "We are too ready to look for entertainment, amusement, interest. We want a religion that will do for a parade, to make a great show. We would be ready to join the church that can make the greatest number of front pages in the tabloid sections of the public press, the cause that attracts the largest publicity. We want headline religion.

"Jesus resorted to no such campaigns or tactics. He never wrote any books, formulated any systems of procedures, arranged any creeds or established any elaborate rituals."

The Rev. Edwin E. Pieplow, pastor of the Trinity Evangelical Lutheran Church, Mount Rainier, urged his congregation to put the problem of the soul before the "bread problem."

"The world seeks first the bread and lets the soul take care of itself," he declared. "For this very reason the world always faces 'the Great Bread Question.'

"Economists use many learned terms concerning the reasons for the existence of a great Bread Question. The Bible uses a very small word to describe the source of all our troubles. That small word is sin. In a world where sin and selfishness rule, these evil forces are bound to cause many to hunger.

"Man regards the question of bread as supreme. He makes it his idol. Many people forego their religious obligations, their religious convictions to pursue the almighty dollar, whether they need it or not. They believe not the parable of the Rice Fool."

Adventist Couple Married, Leave for 7 Years in Japan

Roger Holley and Bride, Ruth Nerlund, Take Vows in Missionary College Hall Where Each Received School Degree

Taking their marriage vows last night at Columbia Hall, Washington Missionary College, Takoma Park, Md., where they began their courtship and received their college degrees, a youthful couple said farewell to several hundred friends for seven years.

The bridegroom, Roger Holley, 24, newly appointed field and home missionary secretary for the Japan Union of the Seventh Day Adventist Church, greeted his bride, Miss Ruth Nerlund, 27, by singing "At Dawning" as she entered the hall. Gowned in white chiffon over satin with a long white veil of tulle, the bride was escorted down the aisle by her father, the Rev. O. J. Nerlund, pastor of the Jersey City Miss Marie Nerlund, of Newark, Church.

The Rev. W. P. Elliott, general manager of the Review and Herald Publishing Co., officiated at the ceremony. As is the custom of the Adventist faith, the ring ceremony was eliminated.

Former schoolmates served as the bridal attendants. The Rev. Wilson Johnson was best man. Ushers were L. G. Small, Charles Crider, Delbert Dick, Hermann Ficker and Walter Gibson, all of whom were graduated from school with Holley last May.

Miss Marie Nerlund, of Neward, N. J., sister of the bride, was maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Alberta Hodde and Elsie Sundstrum, while 2½-year-old Fern Mae Gibson was flower girl. A reception for 85 close friends and relatives of the couple was given by the bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Holley, 22 Grant avenue, following the ceremony.

Each of the newlyweds was a leader in college affairs. Holley was president of his class. Mrs. Holley collaborated with the Rev. F. M. Wilcox, editor of the official church paper, the Review and Herald, on several books. She was secertary to Mr. Wilcox.

They left on their wedding trip across the continent last night. On August 19 they will sail from Vancouver, British Columbia, for Yokohama, Japan, where they will be stationed seven years. Their first duty when they land in Japan will be to learn the language.

Democrats Back Virginia Voting Tax

Majority Report of Clubs Declares Poll Levy Makes Citizens Interested in Civics

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., July 30.—The capitation tax committee of the Young Democratic Clubs of Virginia made public a majority report today recommending that no change be made in the present State laws respecting requirements for voting.

Dean M. Ray Doubles, of the University of Richmond law school, submitted a minority report proposing a modification of the capitation tax requirement, while a fifth member of the committee, Daniel Weymouth, of Heathsville, stated that he would present a second minority report later differing "rather sharply" from the other two.

The reports will be made formally to the annual convention of Virginia Young Democrats at Roanoke, August 25-26. Robert Lane Anderson, State president, said a suggestion would be given to the convention that the report, in its three different viewpoints, be adopted as the basis for a poll of every member individually throughout the State.

The committee said numerous meetings had been held since its appointment at the 1937 convention. Concurring in the majority report were Mrs. John Marshall, Newport News; Charles R. Fenwick, East Falls Church, and Richard S. Wright, jr., Woodstock.

These three held that "good government is not dependent upon a universal and whosesale representation at the polls. So long as the body of potentially qualified voters consists of a sufficiently large proportion of the whole people to represent fairly the wishes and interests of the entire population, and thus prevent an aristrocracy or an oligarchy, democracy and good government will be insured.

The majority group contended that the poll tax was for the purpose of evidencing the interest of the prospective voter in public affairs. Removal of this requirement, the majority report said, would "tend to place in the hands of any demagogue the power to destroy the very objects of good government.

"Persons with no sense of responsibility could be cajoled into going to the polls and voting for all types of proposals and candidates, which would tend to destroy and break down the orderly good government for which Virginia has stood from its inception."

Four Promising Pictures Peek Over the Horizon

Notable Casts and Stories Hopeful Auguries; Yasha Bunchuk Coming as Guest Conductor; This, That and the Other About the Theater

THERE ARE FOUR pictures in the offing that should arouse the lively interest of Washington's moviegoers—"Stanley and Livingston," "Captain Fury," "Unexpected Father" and "Give Us This Night."

This statement is made purely on a basis of past performances. None of the films in question has been even so much as previewed locally. Each, however, possesses some specific virtue, or virtues, to commend it.

BELL

To begin with—and this, perhaps, is the least important consideration—Twentieth Century-Fox expended something in excess of $2,000,000 in the making of "Stanley and Livingston." Producers as canny as Darryl F. Zanuck do not invest that kind of money in a production unless they think they "have something." With Spencer Tracy in the role of Stanley, there is the earnest of another notable performance by a two-time winner of the Academy Award. Walter Brennan, supplying the comedy relief, also has been awarded the Academy accolade for similar chores in other pictures. And besides all that, the newspaper man's seemingly hopeless hunt for a lost explorer should provide plot material of the most exciting nature.

"Captain Fury" is chiefly notable because it finally is going to reach a Washington screen. It has been announced and withdrawn until some of us began to think there might be no such screen play. That error in judgment will be rectified on Friday when Brian Aherne, fresh from "Juarez;" Victor McLaglen, still remembered for "Gunga Din"; John Carradine, from "Stagecoach," and Paul Lukas, who did so well in "Confessions of a Nazi Spy," will unreel the adventures of an Anti-Robin Hood.

Strengthening the appeal of "Give Us This Night" is the implication that Irene Dunne and Charles Boyer may find in it a vehicle as nicely adapted to their talents as "Love Affair." This "Unexpected Father" business, of course, is the new release that features Sandy, the gurgling youngster that "stole the show" from Bing Crosby, Joan Blondell and Mischa Auer in "East Side of Heaven." Mr. Auer, one is lead to believe, appears in the title role. That's all right with Sandy. She—it is one of the perversities of nature that Sandy should be a girl—will steal the show, anyhow.

All of which is pretty nice going for the approach of the "dog days."

Now that "Irene" has proved the success of the experiment of presenting a condensed musical comedy in conjunction with a regular screen bill, it is to be hoped that the Loew executives will see fit to bring along another of these diverting innovations in due course. They will find it extremely difficult, however, to cast their next—if any—as judiciously as was done in the case of the tuneful tabloid now on the stage at Loew's Capitol. Jane Winton, in the title role of "Irene" has had extensive stage, screen and radio experience on both sides of the Atlantic; John Barker and Bartlett Simmons both are singing actors with many successes to their credit; Jerry Delaney and Lida Kane are playing comedy roles they created in the original production of "Irene," almost two decades ago; Eddie Michaels, is a dancing juvenile who will recall the Eddie Foy of the same age to old-timers; Ann Heath, Eunice Healy and Virginia Bolen have decorated musical comedies and revues without number and Violet Holliday has played the Capital in many touring productions. It would be difficult to match that roster, but still maybe it could be done. Worth trying, at any rate.

The Glen Echo Playhouse, one of the newer of the nearby "summer theater" groups, will present "Cato," Joseph Addison's Whig tragedy of 1713, as its second production of the season. The engagement will open on Wednesday night of this week and continue through the following Tuesday night, with definite announcement that there will be no Saturday or Sunday night performances. The cast will be headed by Edward Finlayson, in the title role; Wayne Locklin and Theodore Smith, supported by the principals who recently appeared in "The Tempest," the group's initial effort.

With "Irene" now an established hit, Carter Barron, Eastern division manager for Loew's, Inc., Producer Gene Ford and the others involved have remembered that they have another entertainment item called "Going Native" coming along. Out of more than 200 auditioned applicants, the list of possible principals for this all-local revue has been whittled down to about 65 preferred eligibles. Early this week, Mr. Ford will make his final selections and the cast will be announced. Mean trick, putting 200-plus aspirants on pins and needles this way, but show business is like that.

Dots and Dashes

With days growing shorter and nights longer, seasonable changes in schedules are being made at the Mount Vernon Auto Theater, down on the Richmond highway below Alexandria . . . Hereafter first feature showings will begin at 7:45 p. m., thus insuring two complete runnings of the feature before midnight . . . Yasha Bunchuk, concert cellist and orchestra conductor of note, will occupy the podium at Loew's Capitol Theater as guest conductor, beginning this Friday . . . Bunchuk's engagement is limited to two weeks . . . They should be profitable ones, for Bunchuk is a bit of a favorite in this man's town . . . The first issue of Loew's Movie-Goer, an 8-page tabloid newspaper of theatrical information, made its appearance this week . . . All of the drama desks are mentioned by their right names in the editorial column . . . Hooray! for our side . . . Tomorrow night, "Twelfth Night," by The Washington Players in the National Sylvan Theater on the Monument grounds . . . Star cast of resident actors . . . Shakespeare, like "Irene," condensed, without intermission . . . The "official set" has discovered the Olney Theater . . . Recent audiences have included Justice and Mrs. Hugo Black, Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper, Representatives Jennings Randolph, Edmondston and Dirkson, Maryland's Judge Harold S. Smith, E. Brooke Lee, Judge Prescott and other notables . . . The last issue of Life, by the way, devotes ten pages to the Summer Theater . . . and omits Washington.

New York, July 30.

POLITICS DEPARTMENT: Nathan Strauss, administrator of the United States Housing Authority, tendered a dinner in Washington to celebrate the second anniversary of the bill which created his office . . . Harold Rome, the song writer who recently added "The Red Mikado" to his "Pins & Needles," was one of the guests. He went to the piano and played a song written for the occasion—a song called "The Housing Mikado"—in which Henry Morgenthau, jr., was mentioned . . . "This is all right," Morgenthau told him, "but if you use my name in 'Pins & Needles,' I want it taken out" . . . "But why?" asked Rome . . . "Because in these days you never can tell," said the Secretary of the Treasury. "Who knows? I might want to run for sheriff."

WORLD'S FAIR DEPARTMENT: The guest book of the Turkish Pavilion bears the autograph of Frank Buck. After his name Buck added: "Bring 'Em Back Alive" . . . The next name in that book is that of Fiorello LaGuardia. After his name the Mayor wrote: "Keep 'Em Alive."

FINANCE DEPARTMENT: Hope Dare, who furnished material for the Dixie Davis magazine articles, received $5,400 as her share of the sale . . . Harry Schoenhaus, who was convicted with Davis, received $4.000 . . . The family of George Weinberg—the co-defendant who committed suicide while in custody—received $2,800 . . . Davis is asking $50,000 for the movie rights.

MOVIES DEPARTMENT: Hugh Herbert, the screen comic, has some new ideas about obtaining movie material for his future pictures . . . Herbert has commissioned Dr. Bernard Myers, assistant professor of art at N. Y. U., to dig into the books and supply a story with a historical background . . . Dr. Myers now is working on the script, which will feature Herbert as an ancient Roman comic.

BOOK DEPARTMENT: Oscar Levant is considering an unusual dedication for the new book he's writing—a dedication "To President and Mrs. Roosevelt, for no other reason than that I like them." "I want to go on record as liking them," said Levant, and then—as an afterthought—added: "And if somebody sues me for libel, they're in on it."

BEAUTY DEPARTMENT: George White was one of the judges of the bathing beauty contest held at Loew's 175th Street . . . Two of the showgirls he has signed for his new "Scandals," Lois Andrews and Betty Allen, decided to surprise White by parading with the other entrants . . . Last night they therefore purchased bathing suits and taxied to Loew's 175th Street . . . "It's a gag," they told the backstage official. "We won't accept any prizes. We just want to show what happens when Mr. White sees us" . . . "Where do you live?" the officious official asked . . . "On Fifty-fourth street," they informed . . . "Then you're out of luck," he assured them, coldly . . . "Why are we out of luck?" they persisted . . . "You live outside the neighborhood," he told the "Scandals" girls, "so you're not eligible to become 'Miss Washington Heights.'"

BUSINESS DEPARTMENT: The Savoy ballroom, in the heart of Harlem, has added a new note to the attractions it offers . . . The Savoy now is ready to serve its patrons Blintzes.

LOCAL NEWS: Al Smith confides to his friends that he's in general accord with President Roosevelt's foreign policy . . . Herman Stark, of the Cotton Club, was rushed to Doctors Hospital the other night for an emergency operation . . . Because of his conflict with Tammany Hall over the designation of a successor to Justice Lauer's job, Gov. Lehman may make no appointment and wait until the fall nominations . . . The appointment of Francis Sayre to succeed Paul McNutt as High Commissioner to the Philippines was expected in Washington for almost ten months. It was announced in this space on October 4 of last year . . . District Attorney Dewey will bring Jaime Miara, the No. 1 car thief of the country, back from prison to his office for questioning.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR: Swifty Morgan writes from Chicago: "Was out to see Johnstown run at Arlington, bet on him and then would've become a bridgejumper. Only the fact that Lake Michigan was 22 miles away stopped me from doing the Dutch act—and you know I haven't carried a gun in years. I want to come back to New York, but I owe $11,000 to some old guys there, so I'm staying my distance, hoping that I might outlive them . . . If you see our friend, J. Edgar Hoover, tell him that I've got some ties for him. But wise him up that I'm smart to all the angles—and won't stand for marked currency again."

Bookkeeping Plays a Trick On Actress

Una Merkel, 'Charged Off' for a Year, Is Working Again

By Frederick C. Othman,
United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, July 30.—Way back in the "good old days" when we paid cash on the line to go to the movies, we used to keep an eye peeled for a picture with Una Merkel in it. We never bothered about who were the stars, so long as Una was in it. We thought she was the funniest comedienne on the screen.

So we came to Hollywood two years ago and began wondering about Miss Merkel. She was under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which paid her a big chunk of money every week, but she wasn't doing any work. She wasn't sick, either.

A solid year passed without Miss Merkel ever earning a dime of her salary. In 1938 Metro terminated its contract with Miss Merkel. Thereupon she began making movies again—at Metro. This looked a little peculiar to us, but we never got an explanation until today, when we climbed one of the highest hills back of Hollywood and found Miss Merkel living in a house on top of it.

"It still looks peculiar to me, too," she said, with a hint of that Southern accent we used to hear on the screen. "I think I was a victim of Hollywood bookkeeping."

Seven Years on "Relief"

For seven years she supplied what was known as the comedy relief to one movie after another. She did such a good job of it that her salary soared accordingly.

"And there I was during my last year at the studio, making so much money that no producer dared give me a chance to earn it," she said. "I know that sounds screwy.

"But the salary of each player is charged up to the picture in which he's working. If he hasn't worked for two months beforehand, the picture has got to absorb that, too. A number of producers on the lot wanted me in their pictures, but they always decided against me, because of the heavy charges that had piled up. And every week that I didn't work, the charges got bigger.

"So the studio kept on paying my wages for the full year, while the producers that made pictures for this same studio didn't dare give me any roles. You can't blame them. They were on the spot. You can't blame the studio. It paid me every cent it contracted to. But I surely would like to get my hatchet and go after the bookkeeping department."

No Longer a "Luxury"

When Miss Merkel's contract ended, the same producers who wanted her before were able to get her. They only had to pay her while she worked. So in the last eight months she has played in four pictures, two of them at Metro. And everything's all right again! The accountants seem to have been foiled, insofar as she is concerned.

The trouble, as we see it, is that Miss Merkel isn't the same dizzy blonde she used to be when we paid good money to see her. Her current parts are a good deal soberer.

"And that's a peculiar development, too," she said. "When I started in this business, playing the dumb blonde parts, the leading ladies had to be dignified. You couldn't kick them where they sat down. You couldn't accidentally throw a pie at 'em. They weren't allowed to do anything to give the audience a laugh.

"That's where I came in, until a change came over pictures, and the leading ladies lost their dignity. The Lombards got kicked and the Colberts stopped pies and pretty soon there was so much comedy all over the place that there wasn't any need for little Una any more. At least there was no need for the dumb little Una.

"So lately I've had to be more intelligent on the screen. I've had to play more dramatic kinds of roles. Some people even have written articles about my deciding to quit comedy parts. That's not true. I liked those parts I used to play. I liked that dizzy dame."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, July 30 (INS).—I am rather glad that Lillian Gish decided against playing Mary Todd in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," for I couldn't see her as the high-tempered Mrs. Lincoln. Ruth Gordon, one of the theater's better actresses, is traveling to Hollywood to join Raymond Massey (Lincoln) in the Mary Todd role. Ruth should be good, for she has a lot of spirit and is excellent in both comedy and drama.

LOUELLA PARSONS

She has just finished "Here Today," the stage play by George Oppenheimer, and Max Gordon and Harry Goetz feel very happy that they were able to persuade her to come to Hollywood. Meanwhile, La Gish is all but signed to play mother in "Swiss Family Robinson" opposite Herbert Marshall at RKO.

Bette Davis, true to form didn't attend her preview of "The Old Maid." Bette can't take them—she gets too jittery. Besides, she was on the way East on a special mission. She goes there to read three stage plays the Theater Guild is submitting for her approval. Yes, Warners have given Bette permission to return to the stage for a limited engagement between pictures this fall. Naturally, the Guild is eager to star her—for she has come a long way since she appeared as a very young girl with Richard Bennett in "The Solid South." While in New York there is little doubt that Bette will see Harmon Nelson, her ex, and start reconciliation talk all over again. But come September 1—she's due back in Hollywood for "We Shall Meet Again," with John Garfield.

Just heard that Mary Martin returns to the stage this winter to star in "Sailor Beware," which Lawrence Schwab has bought from Paramount. This is the naughty musical comedy that was so completely altered when it reached the screen that even its own author hardly recognized it. But the stage is permitted much more leeway than the movies, so the original idea will remain intact when it hits Broadway again. Wonder if Para is also planning a remake with Mary. She is under contract to them and they tell me she photographs even better than they hoped. As for her voice, well, it's a honey.

Producers yell "wolf" so often about their discoveries that it's nothing short of a nine-day wonder when a girl like Linda Darnell really lives up to advance adjectives. I can't remember when I've seen a youngster so naturally beautiful without resorting to any of the glamour gal tricks. She isn't the best actress in the world yet—but then her very amateurishness in some scenes was just the right note for her role in Elsa Maxwell's "Hotel for Women." Speaking of that picture, Ann Sothern steals almost every scene she is in—and as for John Halliday, he's so devastating as the "heavy" (?) it's no wonder every woman in the cast (and the audience) falls for him.

Chatter in Hollywood: Amusing is the battle royal going on at this moment over on M-G-M lot as to whether Mickey Rooney's English picture will reach the screen under its original title, "Yank at Eton," or "Andy Hardy at Eton." One faction believes Metro ought to capitalize on the popularity of the Hardy series, while others feel that the similarity of "Yank at Eton" to "Yank at Oxford" should be retained. Personally, I don't think it matters much. However, it might not be so good for Mickey to label him Andy Hardy to the exclusion of everything else. He has to grow up some day, you know. Should the Hardy title win, some of the scenes will naturally be made in Hollywood.

Saturday was Bill Powell's birthday, and believe me he didn't get a chance to forget it all day. Myrna Loy and Woody Van Dyke gave him presents, a cake and all the trimmings, and all the cast of "The Thin Man" were invited to a party on the set. It was a real occasion, for a year ago Bill was so sick there were times when he wondered if he would have any more birthdays. In fact, he almost didn't care. Now he has written an idea for "The Thin Man" which is so good it will probably be turned over to Dashiell Hammett to develop into another movie adventure for Bill.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Unconfirmed rumor is that Annabella and Tyrone Power will add a nursery to their home when they return from Europe . . . The Jack Warner-Dolores del Rio birthday party a new high in Hollywood's social life with decorations never before equaled in our town . . . Ann Warner worked with the co-host, Cedric Gibbons, and William Haines and turned her house into a Venetian carnival Cyclamen pink and black were the prevailing colors, with patent leather tablecloths, flower-covered umbrellas, and an eight-foot plaster tree laden with fruits . . . Joan Fontaine, who has blossomed out as one of Hollywood's most attractive girls, beaued by Alex Steinert . . . Loretta Young turned down all her swains and came alone—so she could have more fun, she said . . . Virginia Peine and Norma Talmadge were other girls who didn't bother with escorts . . . Bob Ritchie brought Olivia de Havilland looking very pleased with himself for nabbing another film beauty.

Mayor Kelly of Chicago, Maximilian Henkle, whose sister is the Baroness Rothschild, and Melville Hall, recently engaged to Mrs. Vanderbilt Phelps, had a good look at Hollywood life . . . Ann Sheridan also rubbed shoulders on the dance floor with her ex, Eddie Norris, who escorted Margaret Lindsay. Saw Maggie talking to Janet Gaynor, who came with Adrian. They have been close friends for many years . . . Rita Lowe goes into the hospital for a minor operation while Eddie is on tour with the Jesse Lasky party . . . Report from Paris is that Marlene Dietrich starts "The Image" shortly with new financial backing. Meanwhile Erich Maria Remarque has turned down all sorts of movie bids for his new story. It's for Marlene or no one.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., July 30.—Marie Seaton, correspondent for the London Times, has just done the impossible. Years ago, when Sergei Einsenstein did "Thunder Over Mexico" he had over 100,000 feet of beautiful film left. I'll be darned if she hasn't gotten it and, with expert help, has cut it into a feature picture. She found eight Mexican musicians who wrote and recorded the music. In fact, Alfred Coates, the English conductor, listened to them the other day and said he had never heard anything like them. It's now ready for release. It's named: "Time In The Sun." But she'll have no time in the sun if it's successful. She'll be known as "Queen of the Salvage."

HOPPER

Katharine Hepburn wants a quarter of a million for "Philadelphia Story." Understand Howard Hughes turned over his share to her.

Grace Moore gave a party to celebrate her getting the Legion of Honor. Bee Lillie among those present, was so interested in it, that Grace pinned it on her. They were having so much fun they forgot about it and Bee wore it home. The following morning her Cockney maid rushed into her room saying, "Oh me lady, me lady, Miss Moore phoned and says she must have the Legion of Nations right back."

During the sneak preview in Pomona of "The Star Maker" they have a scene where the kids start singing "School Days." The entire audience joined in and had the time of their lives. The cards were of the rave variety. Pretty smart of Charlie Rogers to do it that way.

Over 1,500 titles have been submitted to Selsznick for "Intermezzo." Everything from "Spring Interlude" to "Love Song." It will probably go right out as "Intermezzo."

Charles Laughton out in the valley in a fourteenth century Paris church doing a scene for "The Hunch Back" with London on the telephone trying to get an interview with him.

The health officers refused to allow them to scatter garbage throughout Paris streets for realism. What I smelled was real enough.

After Newport, Doug Fairbanks, jr., wanted a little rest and quiet so he took his bride to the World's Fair.

Greer Garson may do the life of Amelia Earhart with Metro ready to take up the option if Gabriel Pascal lets it expire. Green has that Joan of Arc quality.

Mary Martin tells me that Victor Herbert wrote "Kiss Me Again" as a burlesque, taking off all the torrid love singers of the day. But everyone accepted it as a contribution of sweet music. Now, Mary, what a thing to say, when Mr. Herbert's not here to defend himself.

Helen Fortescue Reynolds, under the name of Joyce Gardiner, is playing in "Three Sons" and has a small part in "The Hunch Back." And still denying she wants to be in pictures.

Charlie Farrell is doing "Seventh Heaven" throughout Barnyard Circuit. And "Springtime for Henry" with Eddie Horton is Harvest-time in those same theaters. We implore, cajole and beg foreign talent to listen to the clink of our gold and let Eddie amuse the cows and chickens.

Hal Roach shot most of "The Housekeeper's Daughter" without a script. What a memory?

Designer Edith Head tells me when Dottie Lamour comes through the door a sarong leaps off the hook and drapes itself about her midriff.

Walter Huston usea to be commissioner of lights and power in Wetherford, Tex., Mary Martin's home town, before they both saw the light.

'Peach' for Lubitsch

Whenever one of Garbo's scenes in "Ninotchka" particularly pleases Director Ernst Lubitsch, he shouts, "a peach!"

Wants Horse

Clark Gable is seriously thinking of buying the splendid five-gaited horse that he rides in "Gone With the Wind."

Armed Might Is Stressed At Trans-Lux

Reassuring, indeed, are the news shots of British-French might in this week's Trans-Lux program. What a spectacle! What an army! A horde of man-power, and air and mechanized units in such numbers as you have never seen before. France and Britain are surely ready!

Other news shots depict a comparison of Europe 25 years ago and today; then, Jim Farley, John Hamilton and John Roosevelt and wife are seen departing for Europe; there is the immense Oxford Movement Moral Rearmament rally, in the Hollywood Bowl—plus 30 other flashes, all good and some humorous.

"March of Time's" episode on the movie industry tops the shorts. This review, covering the industry from its beginning, brings back such grand figures as Wm. S. Hart, Rudolph Valentino, Charlie Chaplin, and Marie Dressler, and flashes of such movie classics as "Tillie's Punctured Romance," "The Birth of a Nation," "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "The Big Parade," "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Steamboat Willie," the first Mickey Mouse cartoon.

The week's travelog is "The Beautiful Tyrol," about a quaint country, rarely photographed, and the cartoon is "Donald's Better Self," one of Disney's best efforts.

Foxx Drives In 4 Runs as Bosox Defeat Browns to Snap Slump

By International News Service

Boston, July 30.—Powered by Jimmy Foxx, who drove in four runs with his homer, double and single, the Boston Red Sox this afternoon defeated the St. Louis Browns, 6-4, after two straight setbacks.

Foxx's twenty-fifth homer of the season came in the fifth inning with no one on board and knotted the count at 3-3 after the Brownies had gone ahead in the fourth with a three-run attack on Dennie Galehouse. Foxx had belted across the first two Boston runs in the third inning with a double off the left-centerfield fence and he drove in his fourth tally with a single in the sixth to return the Sox to the lead.

Bill Harris started for the Browns but gave way to Roxie Lawson in the sixth. Galehouse, winning pitcher, yielded to Emerson Dickman in the eighth when the Brownies added their final run.

Manager Fred Haney, of the Browns, was chased from the bench by Umpire Bill McGowan for disputing a decision.

Parker Wins Tennis Title At Seabright

McNeill Defeated, 6–3, 8–6, 6–0, in Final; Frank's First Victory in 7 Years

By the Associated Press

Seabright, N. J., July 30.—Frankie Parker, the mechanical man of tennis, climaxed seven years of competition in the Seabright Invitation tournament today by capturing the historic singles bowl with a straight-set conquest of 21-year-old Don McNeill, hard-hitting Oklahoma collegian.

Looking for all the world like a human machine with his grim face topped by black glasses and white sweat-band, Parker played with a remarkable precision and marksmanship that mowed McNeill into 6—3, 8—6, 6—0 defeat. The fine touch that brought McNeill victories over Gardnar Mulloy and John Hope Doeg in the current tourney and Bobby Riggs in the French Hard Court Championship deserted him completely in the deciding set. He was able to garner only three points off Parker.

Davis Cup Hope

Parker boosted considerably his chances of retaining a Davis Cup place. Winner of six out of seven previous tournaments, he convinced skeptics that his newly developed forehand drive has practically "arrived." He showed it to advantage today against the crisp shots of McNeill and in prior victories over such players as Gil Hunt, Wayne Sabin and Frank Shields.

McNeill carried the fight to Parker in the first two sets, moving into the net to keep Parker on the defensive. Parker was too steady, however, and passed McNeill repeatedly with shots that combed the sidelines. The first set was marked by six breaks of service, four of them against McNeill.

Parker moved into a 2-0 advantage in the second set, only to see McNeill square the issue and eventually move into a 4-3 lead with a great display of net power. He lost his bid to square the match in the eighth game when Parker abandoned his baseline defense and came to the net to score. Parker went ahead by winning his own delivery and only by fine retrieving did McNeill stave off defeat in the tenth game.

Twice at Set Point

He was twice at set point and pulled out to send the set into overtime. But he had shot his bolt, and Parker ran out the set at 8 to 6. The third set took less than 10 minutes.

"Frank was just too good for me today," McNeill said later; "it was impossible to beat him."

Although Parker captured the doubles title here in 1933 with Shields as his partner, this was the first time he had ever got beyond the quarter-final round of the singles competition in the 52-year-old tourney. He succeeded Riggs as champion, Bobby having been beaten by Intercollegiate Titleholder Frank D. Guernsey, jr., in a third-round upset.

Parker and McNeill joined forces to annex the doubles bowls, winning a spirited final from Sabin and Gene Mako and succeeding as

Yugoslavia Is Davis Cup Zone Victor

Wins 2 Singles Over Germany for 3-2 European Margin

Zagreb, Yugoslavia, July 30.—Yugoslavia's Davis Cup tennis team swept the final two singles matches with Germany today to win the European zone final, three matches to two, and qualify for the interzone final next month in the United States, probably against Australia.

Demeter Mitic squared the series by defeating young Rolf Copfert, of Germany, 6—1, 6—2, 6—3, and then Ferenc Puncec trounced Henner Henkel in the pay-off battle, 10—8, 6—3, 6—0.

The swarthy Puncec forced the going from the start, alternating his terrific forehand with a neat change of pace. Henkel went to pieces after losing the long-drawn first set.

Victory was sweet for the Yugoslav team, for this was the third time it had reached the European zone final against Germany, only to get no further.

Feeling ran high throughout the series, the Yugoslav spectators resenting the fact that Roderich Menzel, former Czecho-Slovak star, was a member of the German team. Four detectives guarded Menzel during yesterday's doubles match, in which he and Henkel defeated Puncec and Frank Kukuljevic in five torrid sets.

Pensacola Pro Makes Sixth Ace; 2d on Same Hole

Pensacola, Fla., July 30 (AP).—His sixth hole-in-one and the second on the same hole was made today by Claydon Attridge, Pensacola Country Club golf pro.

Socked by a No. 4 wood, the ball took a beautiful flight down the 220-yard fairway, struck the green 10 feet from the pin and plopped in. Last year Attridge made an ace on the same hole.

Two lawyers and a banker attested to the feat.

Nancy Merki Clips 13.4 Off Kitty Rawls' 800-Meter Free Style Mark in Nationals

By the Associated Press

Des Moines, July 30.—Pacific Coast swimmers left the rest of the Nation's girl hopefuls wallowing in their wake tonight as A. A. U. feminine tank stars wound up the four-day meet here by smashing two American records.

Nancy Merki, 13-year-old former infantile paralysis patient for the Multnomah Athletic Club, of Portland, Oreg., rubbed out one of the marks in convincing fashion when she won the 800-meter free style in 11:19.9.

The old mark, 11:33.3, established by Katherine Rawls Thompson in 1938, was 13.4 seconds slower than the Portland girl's performance tonight.

New Medley Mark

Earlier in the evening a Los Angeles Athletic Club trio hung up a 3:52.8 record in the 300-meter medley relay, 8.8 seconds better than the 4:01.6 mark set by the Women's Swimming Association, of New York, in 1936.

Most of the statistics reflected West Coast domination throughout the championship tests, which are viewed as an important prevue of American feminine swimming strength for the 1940 Olympics.

Dick Metz's Record 270 Wins at St. Paul

DICK METZ

Chicago Pro 18 Under Par, 1 Under Record For Tournament in Winning $1,600 Prize; Henry Picard Second; Lloyd Mangrum Third

By the Associated Press

St. Paul, July 30.—Dick Metz, of Chicago, who gave up his job as an oil field chemist 13 years ago to experiment with golf, drilled his way to a rich championship "gusher" in the 72-hole St. Paul Open today.

The handsome professional, with the hottest streak of golf in the decade old tournament's history, fired rounds of 68, 66, 68, 68 for a total of 270 strokes, one shot under the old mark set by Harry Cooper in 1935 and 18 strokes under par. His aggregate, which won him $1,600 first money, was the lowest 72-hole score of the year for P. G. A.-sponsored events.

Metz, who faded on the final round of the Western Open a week ago, turned on a champion's finish today to make the tourney his own runaway. Five birdies and one eagle 3 marked his morning round 68 and this afternoon, with several stars ready to close in if he

10,000 See Griffs Clinch Game With Four Runs in 4th; Case Batting Star

By Shirley Povich.

A reformed Joe Krakauskas, pitching the first walkless game of his big league career, heaped discomfiture on the sweltering Cleveland Indians yesterday afternoon. The Lithuanian left-hander turned in an eight-hit pitching job and a 5-to-2 victory for the Nats.

A near victim of the heat himself, Krakauskas was liberally dosed with smelling salts between innings and summoned the strength to last out the game, to the applause of the 10,000 customers. The bow-legged blond fast-baller was jubilant in the clubhouse after the game.

"I thought some day I'd pitch a game without issuing a walk, but I never thought it would happen on a day like this," he grinned.

A Fierce Fast Ball

Throughout the afternoon, Krakky was fogging a fierce fast ball over the plate and only on three occasions did a hitter work him for a three-and-two count. Six of the eight hits he yielded were singles, and he didn't permit an Indian beyond second base after the fifth inning.

The Nats won the ball game back in the fourth inning with a four-run outburst against big Al Milnar, Cleveland southpaw who went the eight innings before he was removed for a pinch hitter. Into that fourth inning the Nats packed four of their nine hits.

George Case, Mickey Vernon and Jimmy Bloodworth were the prime movers in the Nats' attack on Milnar. Case lashed out a pair of damaging singles and drove in three of the Nats' runs. Bloodworth and Vernon contributed a pair of two-baggers to the fourth-inning uprising.

They wiped out a 1-0 lead of the Indians in that fourth, after singles by Vernon and Giuliani with none out in the third were put to no use. Bobby Estalella commenced proceedings in the fourth by beating out an infield hit with one out, and with two out the Nats scored all of their runs.

Estalella Scores

Bloodworth thumped a double into centerfield that Ben Chapman lost in the combined elements of the sun, the wind and his own judgment and Estalella scored. Giuliani was purposely passed by Milnar, who then formed the habit and walked Krakky, filling the Gar Wood, jr., son of the famous racing master, yesterday entered the 1939 President's Cup Regatta which will be held on the Potomac September 22, 23 and 24, it was announced by Race Committee Chairman G. A. Bogley.

Young Wood, who himself set a world record of more than 60 m. p. h. at Richmond for Class C outboards, will have plenty of competition in this hotly contested group.

Only Saturday at Boston Clint Ferguson, of Newton, Mass., and Young Wood, who hails from Algonac, Mich., raced to a dead heat over a 5-mile course on the Charles River, averaging 53.925 miles per hour.

Observers said that never before had two competitors finished in a dead heat at near-world-record figures.

Bogley announced that Davis Gerli, of New York, will enter the power boat events with two entries, the Lady Genn III and Gen VI.

Gibson Bradfield, of Barnesville, Ohio, also will have two entires in the regatta here, Bad News and No Follin'.

Then there will be Julius Schloss in Cry Baby II., G. Merritt Twilley in Miss St. Paul and Charles W. Ving in Marie-M, all of Baltimore. T. N. Fowler of Newport News, Va., will enter his Class D boat, Playboy.

The Bradfield entries are both 225 Class boats, Marie-M and Cry Baby II are Class E racers and Miss St. Paul is a Class G entry. The two Gerli boats are Class I boats. local festival. However, the sail-considered the competitive highlight of the Regatta, will climax the two week-ends which will embrace the local festival. However, the sail boat events, with Arthur H. Clephane acting as chairman, and the swimming and equatic events, under the supervision of A. Earle Weeks, will hold many thrills for these types of sports enthusiasts. The sailing races will be held the afternoon of Saturday, September 16, and the swimming and diving contests will be held the same evening.

On Sunday, September 17, there will be morning and afternoon sailing races and in the evening there will be open house and presentation of trophies at the Capitol Yacht Club.

Reds Beat Phillies Twice, Stretch Streak to 10 Straight

Myers' 4-Run Homer Wins Nightcap, 5-1

Walters Takes 18th Pitching Victory in Opener, 9-2; 30,000 See Double-Header

By International News Service.

Cincinnati, Ohio, July 30.—Stretching their victory streak to ten straight, the pace-making Redlegs again won both ends of a double-header with the Phils before 30,298 fans at Crosley Field today by scores of 9-2 and 5-1.

In taking the opener without difficulty, Bucky Walters, the Reds' converted third baseman, recorded his seventh straight pitching victory and eighteenth against only six losses this season.

The Reds administered a similar dose to the cellar-dwellers on Saturday. They took the same kind of action against the Bees on Thursday and started their streak at Philadelphia last Sunday being victorious in a twin bill.

Cincinnati to date has taken 15 out of 16 games played between the two clubs this season. The nightcap was won in most dramatic fashion in the ninth inning, there being three Reds on base, two outs and the score tied, 1-1, when Billy Myers hit the ball over the left field wall for a homer to make the score 5-1 in Cincinnati's favor.

Sunday's crowd of more than 30,000, second largest of the season, sent the Redland attendance figures above the 540,000 mark. The team has played to more than 500,000 on the road also.

The double win gave the Reds their fourth consecutive twin bill, tying the National League mark established by the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1926 and the Giants in 1928. The New York Yankees hold the major league record with six straight victorious bargain bills back in 1908.

Giants, Outhit, Beat Cubs on Error, 3 to 1

Hubbell Gives 10 Hits for 4th Win; Ott Hits Homer

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 30.—Behind Carl Hubbell's steady pitching, the New York Giants defeated the Chicago Cubs, 3 to 1, before 26,626 today to take the series, two games to one.

Though Vance Page held the Giants to five hits, only half as many as the Cubs scattered off Hubbell, one of the blows was Mel Ott's nineteenth homer, his second in as many days.

The Giants' margin of victory was unearned, their other two runs in the third scoring when Billy Herman, Cub second baseman, booted Harry Danning's grounder with two out after Hubbell had survived on Shortstop Dick Bartell's error, and Joe Moore singled.

Chisox Split Double Bill With Yanks

Selkirk's 2 Homers Win Opener, 4-3; Lee Takes Finale, 5-1

By International News Service.

New York, July 30.—The Chicago White Sox today gained a split in a double-header with the Yankees when they took the nightcap, 5-1, after the New Yorkers had captured the opener, 4-3.

George Selkirk was practically the whole ball team for the Yankees in the opener, his sixteenth and seventeenth homers of the season accounting for all their runs. He homered in the second with two mates on base and knocked another four-bagger in the fourth.

Lefty Gomez was credited with the victory, although he had to be replaced when the Sox rallied for all their runs in the ninth.

Thornton Lee held the Yanks in the nightcap, while the White Sox were collecting 13 hits off Hadley, Russo and Chandler. The Yanks made seven hits and didn't score until the eighth inning by which time the Sox had all their tallies.

Strongberg Gets Semifinal Bout On Mat Program

Rudy Strongberg, 235-pound California wrestler, who has won his only two local matches, will be promoted to a semiwindup role on Thursday's card at Turner's Arena. Nanjo Singh, the Hindu, who is wowing spectators with his "cobra clutch," and Rosy Red Ryan, the popular Lithuanian, are headlining the show.

Strongberg, a veritable powerhouse in the ring, made an impressive showing last Thursday when he downed Slammin' Hank Metheny, and it was because of that showing that Promoter Turner elevated him to a bout with Pete Managoff, younger brother of the more famous Ivan.

Local fans viewed with great interest Strongberg's victory over Metheny, for they believe that it won't be long before he'll be stealing the thunder from the Singhs and the Haders.

Meanwhile, Ryan is casting off boasts that he had developed "just the thing" to stop Singh's "cobra."

William Havens, Jr., Of District, Wins Senior Double Blade

By the Associated Press

New York, July 30.—The Yonkers (N. Y.) Canoe Club captured the national canoe championship for the third successive year today by scoring 65 points on Fountain Lake at the World's Fair. It was the first national meet of any kind ever conducted within the fair grounds.

The victory was essentially a team triumph, for Yonkers failed to win any of the six individual events, accounting for second places in five of them. In the Tandem and four races, however, the Yonkers contingent, aided by the Kopko brothers, William and Paul, showed marked supremacy.

The Kopkos with Eugene Keefe, Robert Dunford and Andy Fetke, all but swept the junior and intermediate team events, and left the remains to the Washington (D. C.) Canoe Club, which finished second with 37.

Howard Woodward, of the Philadelphia Canoe Club, annexed the single senior blade race in the fast time of 3:47.2. Andy Kulakowich, of Yonkers, was second. The senior double blade went to William Havens, jr., of Washington, who defeated Ebby Trilling, a teammate, in 2:35.3.

The Cacawa Canoe Club of Philadelphia, scored 11 points for third place, and a point behind in fourth was the Breeds Canoe Club of Dedham, Mass.

Brooklyn's Hopes Of Gaining First Division Shattered

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, July 30.—Brooklyn's hopes of climbing into the first division by sweeping the four-game series with the St. Louis Cardinals were shattered today as the Redbirds won both ends of a double-header by the same score, 5-2. Leo Durocher's scrapping Dodgers won the first two games of the series.

Don Padgett, slugging catcher, spoiled the Dodgers' chances in the first game. His fourth home run of the season, in the fifth, came with two men on base and supplied the winning margin.

Brooklyn errors started their downfall in the second game. In the third inning, with the game scoreless, Bob Bowman doubled. Pepper Martin hit to John Hudson who threw wild to third trying for Bowman, the pitcher ran on home and Martin went on to second. Jimmy Brown bunted and Cookie Lavagetto missed Hugh Casey's throw to third trying to head off the Wild Horse of the Osage and Martin scored. After Enos Slaughter lined out, Johnny Mitze singled Brown home. These three runs proved enough although the Cards added two more in the seventh.

In the ninth with two men on, Ernie Koy was sent in as a pinch-hitter for the Dodgers but he fouled out instead of repeating his feat of Saturday—a home run that drove in three runs.

Bob Barnett, Chevy Chase professional, was three under par with a 67 yesterday at Washington Golf and Country Club as he and George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood pro, hung a 3-and-2 defeat on Leo Walper, driving range mentor, and Dave Thomson, of the host club.

Barnett went over par on the ninth and eighteenth holes but dropped five birdie putts, three on the first nine for an outgoing 33. With the match over, he had par on the last hole for a 66 but was over the green in two and took five to get down.

Walper was out in 36 and back in 32 for a 68, with five birdies but three-putt greens on the fourth, eighth and ninth held his score to two below par figures. The putting lapses were his only mistakes of the round, and on the greens he three-putted the putts he missed for pars were all under four feet.

Diffenbaugh had a 71 and Thomson a 76.

BEAVER DAM

Miniature tournament honors at Beaver Dam went to Medalist Joe Balestri who made a clean sweep of the match play by defeating Doug Mattison, 2 and 1, in the final round. Balestri won medal honors with a 37 in the qualifying round.

WASHINGTON

Intraclub team matches at Washington were one-sided, with Pomeroy's "Dingbats" defeating White's "Pelicans," 16½ to 1½, and Nichol's "Scuffers" trouncing Franklin's "Boasters," 13½ to 4½.

ARGYLE

Argyle members, smarting under two defeats by Beaver Dam this month, both by close scores, postponed their schedule tilt with the Loudoun Club, of Purcellville, yesterday until August 13.

A complete revision in the method of play for the District Public Links championship, September 5-8, was announced yesterday, with 32 players qualifying for the match play rounds from East Potomac, Rock Creek and Anacostia and the survivors battling it out in four 18-hole matches and a 36-hole final for the title at East Potomac.

In previous years the tournament has been 72-holes medal play, in conjunction with the qualifying for the national public links championship.

Entrants will play 18-holes medal play September 5 at the three courses, with the low 16 scores at East Potomac qualifying for the match play, the low eight at Rock Creek and a like number at Anacostia. Medals will be awarded the low scorer at each course.

Play September 6

The first two rounds of match play are scheduled September 6 at East Potomac, the quarter and semifinals September 7, over the same course, and the 36-hole finals the following day. If the championship match is even, the playoff will be 18 holes, instead of the customary sudden death method.

The winner will receive the S. G. Leoffler Trophy, for a year, and a medal for permanent possession. Andy Oliveri won the first leg on the new trophy last year, after Claude Rippy retired the original cup with his third victory in 1937.

It will be the first year Anacostia has figured in the play for the city publinks championship, the former tourneys having been played at Rock Creek and East Potomac. With the qualifying rounds over three courses the event should draw the biggest field in history, although the places are generous enough so that all the stars should qualify with ease.

Dates and the site of the junior public links play were also set for Anacostia, starting August 14. Play has been changed to the 72-hole medal route.

The age limit will remain at 21 years, that leaves Defending Champion Gail Holmes and Runner-up Bob Leapley eligible. Anacostia Manager Harry Graham will accept entries until August 13, with no post entries accepted. There will be no entrance fee.

champions Sidney Wood and Joe Hunt. Playing their first tournament together Parker and McNeill teamed up like veterans and smashed through the West Coast pair by a score of 6—1, 6—1, 4—6, 6—3.

Parker and McNeill, who will play together in the Southampton tourney starting tomorrow, had a chance to run the match off straight sets, but Mako and Sabin, down 1—3 in the third, rallied sharply to force the match into overtime.

Helen Bernhard, of New York, 18-year-old national girls champion, captured the women's singles title with a 6—3, 7—5 victory over Dorothy Workman, of Los Angeles, sixth-ranking player. Miss Workman was seeded second; Miss Bernhard was unseeded, but her triumph was no surprise to those who watched her upset Dorothy May Bundy and Virginia Wolfenden in her path to the championship.

The stockily built youngster from Greenwich Village outstroked her more experienced rival to win the crown which was not defended by Alice Marble.

Miss Marble, national champion and recent victor at Wimbledon teamed up with Adrian Quiest, the Australian Davis Cup player, to win the mixed doubles final from Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, of Brookline, Mass., and Elwood T. Cooke, of Portland, Oreg. The scores were 6—1, 3—6, 6—3.

Va. Seniors' Tournament Opens Today

Play Restricted to Men More Than 49; Beisel Is Champion

By the Associated Press.

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., July 30.—Just to prove once more that there's life in the old boys yet, the greying golfers of the two Virginias went on their practice rounds today in preparation for the serious business of tournament.

Members of the Virginias seniors have three reasons for gathering every year at Old White—the Virginias seniors championship itself, the Virginias seniors team title and to get together for social hours.

Only golfers of 50 years of age or more can enter the eleventh annual tournament, beginning tomorrow. The lowest gross score recorded in the three days of play will entitle the shooter to the title of champion for 1939.

The defender is A. R. Beisel, of Huntington; Ross Puette, of Richmond, Va., won in 1937; Dr. C. L. Dickens, of Lynchburg, Va., in 1936, and Harold Bloch, of Wheeling, in 1935.

The State team championship, to be played for Tuesday, will be determined by a complicated system based on the Nassau scoring principle. Foursomes will play lowball and aggregate, teamed two and two from each State.

Dr. Gory Hogg, of Lewisburg, is captain of the West Virginians, and Col. W. S. Battle, jr., of Roanoke, Va., will lead the defenders from the Old Dominion.

In the ten engagements, the Virginians have won the team title six times, but oddly enough the total points amassed since 1929 are the same—278½ for each.

West Virginia won the team title in 1935 and 1936, but the Virginians have won the last two engagements.

C. B. Cole, of Richmond, is president of the Association of Elder Sharpshooters and J. L. Bumgardner, of Beckley, is secretary-treasurer. Angus McDonald, of Lewisburg, is vice president for West Virginia, and E. D. Hotchkiss, jr., of Richmond, for Virginia.

New officers will be elected at a dinner Monday night.

Bout Planned to Highlight N. B. A. Convention Here in September

Washington's heavyweight fight conscious fans will see Max Baer's kid brother, Buddy Baer, in action against the winner of the Nathan Mann-Steve Dudas fight August 7 in Griffith Stadium, if the plans of Col. Harvey L. Miller, secretary of the District Boxing Commission, meet approval of Ancil Hoffman, the Baer boys' manager.

Miller wired Hoffman on the West Coast seeking to get Max for a bout here September 11 in conjunction with the National Boxing Association's convention. He was informed that Max will be tied up in Hollywood making a picture, but that Buddy will be available.

The former heavyweight champion's brother now stands close to the first ten heavyweights in the honorable mention list as a result of three consecutive knockouts recently and would be a good opponent for the winner of the Mann-Dudas fight, Miller wrote Hoffman yesterday.

"Hoffman is a very good friend of mine, and I'm very optimistic about getting this bout," Miller said. A little match between Featherweight Champion Joey Archibald and Petey Scalzo is still being sought for the convention highlight, however.

Meanwhile, Promoter Joe Turner and Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday signed Jake Friedman, of Baltimore, for a preliminary fight with Maynard Daniels, young heavyweight who has piled up a string of six straight knockouts on the West Coast, on the Mann-Dudas card August 7.

Jim Braddock, manager of Dudas, is expected to bring another young heavyweight from his stable to add to the "all heavyweight' card Ahearn and Turner plan to present. These gentlemen are depending on the local demand for heavyweight fights, a rarity around these parts, to cure the prolonged slump in boxing in the Capital. And they are also crossing their fingers, for they will have to clear more than $2,500 to break even.

Tickets for the show will be placed on sale tomorrow at Turner's Arena, Promoter Turner said last night.

Read's Beats Flood Nine In 11th, 10-9

National City Leader Rallies to Tie Score At 9-9 in Seventh

The march of Read's Pharmacy through all National City A League competition was briefly halted yesterday when it met the league's other "hot" club, J. C. Flood, on the South Ellipse. Read's trailed from the second until the seventh inning, but finally came up to tie the score and win in the eleventh, 10 to 9.

With Jack Redinger settling down after a shaky first inning, Flood rooled up a 9-to-5 advantage before Read's came to bat in the seventh. When Read's took the field again the score was knotted, 9 to 9.

Neither club was able to score from then until the eleventh. Then, Read's got two men to base, one on an error by Johnny Thrift and the other on a single, and Outfielder Wainwright pushed the winning tally across with a single to right-field. Zimmerli, who relieved Starting Pitcher Giller for Read's during Flood's four-run spree in the second, took credit for the victory.

A smashing 16-to-0 shutout was scored by Deoudes, Inc., in the junior section over the Uline nine. Carmel Nance, former Western High hurler, gave up only two hits to put Deoudes in a three-way tie with Boys Club, No. 5, and the Cardinals in the section lead.

Carley's Earns Berth in City Title Play-Offs

Beats Typewriters, 4-1, on Big Rally; Beall, Campbell Star

With a 4-to-1 victory over United Typewriter softballers yesterday, Carley's ten earned the right to represent the Regal League in the city-wide championships slated for next month. Carley's was the first team to reach the end of its regular season play, going through the second half series without the loss of a game.

For 5½ innings yesterday, however, the champions in the new league appeared about to lose their first game. Typewriter baismen hung up a 1-run lead in the fourth, but Carley's, paced by Beall, Campbell and Suit, staged its big inning in the sixth, scoring all its runs.

Saratoga Springs Starts 32-Day "Vacation" Meeting Today

Legion 'Cap Flash Head Opening Card

7 Events Celebrate 75th Birthday of Country's Oldest Racing Course

By the Associated Press.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., July 30.—"Vacation" time for racing's biggest circuit came tonight as wealthy stable owners and the boys who handle their horses converged on this up-State New York town of the towering elms to help celebrate Saratoga's diamond jubilee which opens tomorrow.

Oldest in America, the beautiful course in the foothills of the Adirondack Mountains is a one-month stop on the tour that leads from New York to Maryland to Florida and back each year. Sandwiched in between the two halves of the metropolitan New York season, it is considered the perfect "vacation" spot for racing men.

Inaugurating the seventy-fifth birthday party tomorrow will be a seven-race program featured by the American Legion Handicap and the Flash, first of the Spa's great 2-year-old stakes.

Juveniles Get Chance

For posterity, the Flash, with an estimated value of $5,500, seems the more important. In this, the oldest 2-year-old race in America, many juveniles kept inactive at earlier meetings by a coughing epidemic will get a chance to prove their worth. Among the 18 nominees are such highly regarded prospects as Mrs. Payne Whitney's Cherry Trifle and Yes or No, the Manhasset Stable's Epatant and Call to Colors and George D. Widener's Rousian.

The Legion 'Cap has drawn ten older horses and Howard Bruce's Jay Jay holds slight favoritism among the crowd that has congregated along Saratoga's Broadway. Their second choice lay between the Greentree Stable's entries, Roll and Toss and Armor Bearer.

Later in the meeting, which runs until September 2, more important races will draw the best horses now in training. They will be shooting for upward of $400,000 offered in 28 different stake events, 11 of which are for 2-year-olds. Johnstown is entered in several stakes.

It's a Vacation

But on this sultry, cloudy day, whiling away the time until the first cry of "they're off!" the boys who handle the horses played baseball or took to the golf links.

"Saratoga is our vacation," Jockey Sonny Workman once explained. "Here we do our jobs on the race track, then have our fun doing things we want to do."

Daily, the stableboys, jockeys, assistant starters and, yes, the bookmakers, choose up sides for baseball.

Then there's the weekly stableboy fights, when the 90-pound kids who are learning to be jockeys get into a ring and whale the tar out of each other. They hire a professional referee, but depend upon fistic-minded horse trainers, the track veterinarian and one or two visiting celebrities for judging and time keeping.

At other big-time tracks, turfmen leave at the end of each day's racing for big-city apartments or a cottage in the suburbs. At Saratoga, they just sit out the time between racing days, golf, swim, or play the "night spots."

Hosts Cleaned Out

Potomac A. C. played host in a double-header ball game to Noland Plumbers yesterday and was rudely beaten twice, 15-3 and 11-4.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

New York, July 30.—As might be expected of a nation that had the conscience and gumption to pay its war debts, Finland has waded with two-fisted enthusiasm into the monumental task of staging the 1940 Olympics. The little nation will spend $15,000,000 on stadia, arenas and paying surfaces, housing, roads and other improvements. Fifty thousand Finns of every known calling are actually studying English and J. W. Rangell, doughty president of their Olympic organizing committee, has offered to fist-fight any European statesman, diplomat, dictator or munitions magnate who wants to start the war which would interfere with the games.

CONSIDINE

It may be difficult for a nation as troubled by labor pains as ours is to understand Finland, but actually thousands of Finnish workers have volunteered to work—without pay—on the hundreds of structures now being built for use by the 3,000 Olympic athletes.

A real estate company is turning over an entirely new suburban development, including 30 apartment houses, to house the athletes and their satellites. After the games the apartments will be sold as new abodes. The entire layout will be a miracle of compactness, confined to 50 acres, and within easy walking distance to the 63,000 seat stadium which has been built in next to record time. Of Finland's 32,000 allotment, the best seats will go to those citizens who have done the most work, manual or inspirational, to further the progress of Finnish sports.

Entire Program in Hands of Prominent Finns

The entire program is in the hands of Finns who not only hold prominent positions in their government service but also were fine athletes.

Rangell was pole vault champion of Finland in 1912. Urho Kekkonen, the "Ickes" of the country, won three Finnish jumping titles in 1924, and placed fourth in a high jumping event as late as two years ago. Erik von Frenckell, president of the stadium foundation, was a well known runner as well as one of the fathers of Finnish golf. Gen. Hugo Osterman, another member of organizing committee, is commander in chief of the Finnish army, was a fine runner, a ski champ, a fine shot and is still one of Finland's leading steeplechase riders. Minor Olympic officials are, without fail, former athletes of distinction. Paavo Nurmi, grown rich with real estate deals, is coaching the middle distance runners.

Finland's chief interest in the games—and this is novel enough—seems to be to stage them with an eye to their original peaceful intentions. The country won't make the occasion a display of military strength, man-power or civic salesmanship. It purposely cut down the size of the central stadium, realizing the harm of trying to out-dazzle the 1936 games at Berlin. It has dropped the sports of hockey, basketball, handball and women's gymnastics because it felt that they were not international enough in scope, which fact would have reacted against certain of the smaller nations. It has added such sports as gliding, which certainly is international now.

When the United States recently cabled word that it would compete in all 132 events, they got out extra editions of the Finnish papers. The golden age of Finnish sports sprung from America.

Learns Training System From U. S. Runners

In 1909 Wipja Kolehmainen, a professional distance runner, came here to barnstorm. He didn't pick up much money, but he absorbed every training system which had been plotted out or improved by the American runners. He took the information back to Finland with him, tried it on his younger brothers, Hannes, and Hannes won first place in all the long-distance events at the Stockholm Olympics in 1912. Avery Brundage, now president of our Olympic committee, raced in Finland that same year and made a tremendous impression. From those lowly beginnings came the generation that produced Nurmi, Ritola, Jarvinen, Lehtinen, Salminen, Isohollo and Finland's other Cunninghams.

If Kolehmainen had been a ball player, the average Finnish kid of today would want to play baseball. As it is his great ambition is to win a 5,000-meter race. Just as our kids can rattle off the batting averages of DiMaggio, Ott, Greenberg and a few others, Finnish moppets know the running times of all the world's prominent hoofers. If a Finn beats Don Lash in the 5,000-meter race a year from now he'll be the Lindbergh of his country.

With a full year to go there is already a ticket shortage. Some 1,900,000 tickets will be printed, on special bank-note paper to avoid counterfeiting. To give everybody a chance to see the thing, there will be no sale of tickets permitting the holder to the same seat each day. Townsfolks within 25-mile area of Helsinki will open their homes to visitors, for the hotel accomodations are limited. Many of these humble folk are undergoing the miseries of learning English, to make the stay of 25,000 American visitors a little more comfortable, and saving hard-won dough with which to buy tickets of their own.

The Brighter Side . . .

—By Damon Runyon

Mr. Joe Turp writes:

Brooklyn, July 29.

Dear Sir: One night a couple of weeks ago my wife Ethel ses Joe I have been thinking about something all day long. I ses what have you been thinking about sweets? She ses I have been thinking about the first couple of years we was married and the way you used to come home and kiss me.

RUNYON

I ses well I just this minute came home and kissed you, so what? She ses yes but how? I ses what do you mean how? She ses how did you kiss me? I ses I kissed you on the lips. She ses yes but you did it awfully quick and only once. You kissed me the same way you do when you are leaving the house in the mornings Joe. Awfully quick and only once. Sometimes you miss my lips and kiss me on the cheek or on the top of the head.

I ses just a minute sweets. I ses what is the idea of all this anyway? I ses if I kiss you quick it is because I am in a big hurry and if I miss your lips it is probably because you turn your head all of a sudden to have something more to say. She ses but when you miss you never try to take better aim a second time. You just go on away.

I ses well, baby, you know very well I always have to rush to get on the job in the mornings, and she ses would one little old minute make any difference in getting on the job, Joe? I ses what do you mean by a minute? She ses I mean 60 seconds. I ses no, I guess that would not make any difference, as far as getting on the job is concerned.

Ethel ses well, would 30 seconds make any difference? That is half a minute, Joe. I ses no, I guess not, and she ses well do you know that a 30-second kiss is a wonderfully long kiss that somebody's wife would remember all day long? Many's the 30 seconds kiss you used to give me, Joe, before leaving for work, and when you came home, too, and some of them may have been minute kisses. I ses why, Ethel, I have not noticed that I was shortening you up on kisses, and she ses that's just it. You have not noticed. Suppose you kiss me now for 30 seconds and see if you can remember when you last gave me a kiss that long.

I ses why Ethel you are just imagining something. I ses I will bet I have kissed you that long lots of times lately except when I was in a very big hurry. She ses Joe the longest kiss you have given me in over a year was a six seconds one and it was only once. Most of them were one seconders Joe. I ses why you must be crazy Ethel. I ses a one seconder kiss would be just a dabber and she ses well that is what they have been Joe. Just dabbers. I remember the six seconds one because it was so much longer than the others.

I ses look Ethel. I ses how on earth could you tell how long those kisses were unless you had your watch right there to time them? She ses I did. I ses you did what? She ses I did have my watch. I have been holding it behind your back when you kiss me in the mornings just to see how long you take. That is why I sometimes turn my head and make you kiss my lips but you could try a second time and take better aim if you wanted to. You never do Joe.

I ses well that is the worst thing I ever heard of in my life where somebody's wife times their kisses. I ses Ethel I am surprised at you. I ses it does not sound nice to me and I hope nobody ever finds it out. I ses suppose everybody's wife timed their kisses? Ethel ses O pooh Joe everybody's wife does but I guess I am the first one that ever thought of a watch to make sure. I wanted to tell my moms.

I ses what has your moms got to do with it Ethel? She ses why my moms always ses that when somebodys husband starts shortening up his kisses when he is leaving the house and when he comes home it is a sign he does not love her any more. My moms ses when they get down to half a second to look out. You are pretty close now Joe.

I ses I never knew your moms was an expert on kissing Ethel and Ethel ses ho don't you worry about my moms. My uncle Ben ses my pops had to fight his way through half of Brooklyn to get her. I ses did your moms ever time your pops kisses? Ethel ses no she never had to. When my pops is leaving the house to go to work in the morning he comes back two or three times to kiss my moms and when he comes home in the evening he goes into the kitchen two or three times while she is making the dinner to kiss her.

I ses I guess you come from a kissing family Ethel and she ses you bet I do. Nobody in my family was ever in too big a hurry for a kiss. Another thing Joe you used to hold me tight in your arms when you kissed me but now sometimes when you are leaving the house in the mornings you put on your hat first and then you do not hold me when you kiss me because you are afraid the hat will fall off. My Moms ses no gentleman ever kisses his wife with his hat on. Then Ethel starts to cry.

I ses well sweets you just stop crying now and I will see that you do not have anything to complain of again. I ses I guess maybe I have been hurrying a little more than necessary but you tell me a week or so from now what you think. So she stopped crying and I took her to a movie and this morning when I was leaving the house for work I ses Ethel are you still timing me on kisses and she ses O Joe I threw my watch away a week ago.

Yours truly JOE TURP.

Rukeyser Says: Nazis Learn Persons Are Big Assets

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser,
International News Service Economic Commentator.

HAS NATZI GERMANY reached the crest of its economic power? This question is raised by the recent decline in the psychological curve of crowing by Teuton propagandists.

For example, Prof. Ernst Wagemann, director of the German Institute for Business Research at Berlin, recently revealed: 'In comparison with previous years the present tempo of production increase has naturally slowed down considerably. However, in past years the economy had more than enough reserves in the army of unemployed and in the shut-down of factories.

"These reserves only had to be brought back to life by an active economic policy and by the use of credits.

"If the tempo of increase is slower today, this only shows that in most economic spheres an expansion of production is possible only to the extent additional labor supply and production capacities are available."

BEFORE WE TENDER Americans weep too much over the German plight growing out of a labor shortage, we might suggest to the Teuton economists that the nation augment its productive manpower through freeing human beings now incarcerated in concentration camps. The complaint about labor shortage seems ironic in the light of the Nazi policy of persecuting and expelling from the country thousands of useful and productive German citizens on the ground that they were not blue-eyed and blonde.

And in the light of the wholesale wrecking of careers of "non-Aryan" technicians, engineers, industrial managers, builders and capitalists, it seems strange to be talking in the spirit of academic calm about a shortage of capital facilities.

To me the significant phase of the newest twist of economic events in Germany is a reminder that human beings constitute topnotch national assets, not liabilities. This should be obvious enough, but in periods of extensive unemployment we develop optical illusions and begin to think fallaciously that there may be a surfeit of manpower.

And it should not be assumed that only war making or preparation can create an increased demand for manpower.

In peaceful America, once we balance the national economy, we shall find opportunity for full employment of employable workers.

WE SHALL REDISCOVER the truth that the productive worker is worthy of his hire, and out of his functioning creates the purchasing power which is needed.

When Nazi propaganda is tested by simple arithmetic, it is difficult to reconcile the present labor shortage with the plea for more territory because Germany is overcrowded and needs new outlets for her manpower. In the language of the old-time wisecrack, "Who's looney now?"

Dr. Wagemann takes much pride in the increase of productivity per worker under the Nazi regime, and objective observers should not permit their emotions or political prejudices to obscure the tangible progress made. Apparently the national goose-stepping in Germany has awakened the lethargic.

THE IDEOLOGY has given the worker "a cause" to fight for, despite what free Americans may happen to think of the validity of the cause. But for the short term, it must be remembered that error, fallacy, and sheer demagogy can influence the course of events. The role of hallucinations in history should be critically examined.

Long before Herr Adolf Hitler was born, Charles Mackay wrote a little volume entitled "Memoirs of Extraordinary Popular Delusions and the Madness of Crowds."

Mackay dealt with the expression of popular delusions in financial crazes, such as the Mississippi bubble, but it does not take too much imagination to see the counterpart in the real of politics and new "social" thinking.

Japan Hurries Copper Buying In U. S. Market

New York, July 30 (AP).—Japanese interests got busy in the domestic copper market this week almost immediately on the heels of American denunciation of the 1911 trade treaty with the Far Eastern nation.

Sales to Japan totaled about 800 tons at a price equivalent to 10.41 cents a pound c. i. f. European base ports. Traders attached more than usual significance to this buying and many made the guess demand from Japan might be intensified in the six-month grace period allowed under the treaty.

Meanwhile, a split price developed in the market when a leading custom smelter refused to follow a recent ⅛-cent markup to 10¾ cents a pound. Toward the end of the week, however, rumblings were heard that the price structure was strengthening and many observers felt the split quotation would not last long.

Turnover in the export market held up in good fashion, the price reaching a high of 10.40 cents at the week-end.

Means for Restoring Confidence Differ by Groups, Babson Says

Questions of Labor, Trade, Relief, Neutrality and Taxes Arouse Varied Views From Opposing Schools

By Roger W. Babson

Gloucester, Mass., July 30.—Our decade-old business depression has, for the first time in 160 years, caused our standard of living to decline. At least, that is what Howard Coonley, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, said a few nights ago. He insists that "only through restoration of confidence in the American system can this country resume progres." In general, everyone agrees with Mr. Coonley. Naturally, we all want confidence. We all know that when we are confident, things go along much better—we work harder, more people have jobs, and we spend money more freely.

On the other hand, there is tremendous disagreement as to what is meant by "confidence." Different groups of people, different sections of the country, and different political leaders have entirely opposite views as to what will restore confidence. Both Howard Coonley and Norman Thomas would state that the greatest need of the world is "confidence." Yet, they would absolutely disagree as to what will bring about that confidence.

ROGER W. BABSON

No One Agrees on Anything

Some people, for instance, want old-age pensions for everybody, while others feel that this would bankrupt us. Some want stricter labor legislation, while others argue for less. Some want more Federal money spent for "relief," while others insist that all relief expenditures should come from local "community chests." Some want prices fixed at "cost," while others insist that only free markets for commodities, labor, and enterprise will bring about prosperity. Some hope to see Government banks which will give credit to everyone, while others think that the Government is already meddling too much with our banking system.

Some want neutrality, while others believe that the United States should come out now and say we will sell England and France all the munitions they want to buy. Some want higher tariffs to protect labor, while others say that lower tariffs would mean greater foreign trade and hence more jobs. Some believe higher income taxes would help business, while others insist that lower income taxes would result in more employment. Some want a bigger Army and Navy, while others want this money spent on schools, hospitals, and libraries. Some are urging laws to prevent married women from working while others believe that wives have a right to a "career."

Congress Pulled and Hauled

Our Congressmen are even more upset than are the people. They are constantly being pulled and hauled. Most of the groups above mentioned have "associations" with paid secretaries who are in Washington figuring for their "good causes." In order to hold their jobs each of these secretaries tries to call personally on the largest number of Congressmen and bombard them with the greatest number of letters and telegrams. The whole thing has become a great big racket. Worst of all, our Senators and Representatives do not have time to study, or even to think. They are harassed day and night by these selfish pressure groups.

This all means that our fundamental difficulty is that we have thrown out of the window the Republic which Washington, Madison and Hamilton founded. As we all know, they set up a government with three distinct branches to check each other. Moreover, the legislative branch was divided into two groups—the House of Representatives, elected by popular vote, and the Senate, elected by the State Legislatures. They moved Congress from New York City to "a quiet and secluded place on the Potomac," which they named Washington.

The Founding Fathers' idea was to have us elect our Representatives and our President in accordance with the principles outlined, and then to let them alone. Every two years there is an election and we have the privilege of throwing out any Representatives whom we do not like. While they are in Washington, however, we are supposed to let them alone and operate a representative Republic rather than a mob-rule democracy.

If space permitted, I should like to show how this pressure-group racket has gradually increased. Briefly, before the World War, it operated only on the legislative branch. Since then it has been applied to the Executive branch. The courts are still free from intimidation by lobbyists; but they will next be attacked. Yet the founders of our country planned that Congress and the Executive should be as free from attacks from pressure groups and paid secretaries as are the courts.

Yes, the country needs confidence. Only by the restoration of confidence will business return to normal, unemployment and relief be eliminated and our various Government budgets be balanced. The first confidence needed, however, is in our Congress. Before we can have confidence in anything else we must have confidence in our Senators and Representatives. We must have confidence enough to forbid pressure groups from harassing them.

In short, confidence will be restored as pressure groups are outlawed. Now, just one more thought: Please do not write me letters about free speech, etc. Of course, I believe in free speech. You should always be free to write your Senators or Representatives any letter that you wish, or talk to them in person when they are home. By pressure groups, I mean paid lobbyists, paid lawyers, paid propagandists, and other paid people who are making a business out of Government relief and socalled welfare.

Engineer Tells Of Telephone's Early Gains

Spoke First Words From New York to Denver in 1912

"You don't have to talk so loud."

Those were the first words spoken from New York to Denver across the first telephone wires rigged up between the two cities in 1912. They were uttered by Dr. Herbert Groves Dorsey, now principal engineer of the United States Geodedic Survey here.

DR. DORSEY

"But New York's a dickens of a long way off," was the answer of the man at the other end.

The conversation took place when Dorsey was engaged in research work in the laboratories of the Western Electric Co., he said here last week, in discussing the twenty-fifth anniversary of transcontinental telephony.

Now, at 63, Dorsey is still engaged on sound amplifying inventions, and is trying to perfect the fathometer, his own invention, which is used to measure the position of ships at sea by sound.

The New York-Denver call was made in tests of the mechanical amplifier, known technically as the H. E. Shreeve repeater, a gadget similar to the one now installed in radios for volume control. "We were working for distance . . . and more distance," said Dorsey.

In the Spanish-American War, Dorsey said, he installed wireless guiding apparatus on the S. S. Iowa, flagship of Admiral "Fighting Bob" Evans at Cuba.

For the last ten years he has operated his own amateur radio station, W3HZ. Living at 3708 Thirty-third place northwest, he has sent, and received, messages to South America, Australia, New Zealand, Hawaii, England, France and Cuba. "But," he added, "my son, William Dorsey, has done better than that by talking to all the continents over our set." William is in his third year at Harvard. The older son, Herbert G. Dorsey, jr., is a meteorologist at Floyd Bennett Field, N. Y.

The pioneer physicist is a graduate of Denison University, Johns Hopkins, Harvard and Cornell.

Police to Check Mariners Fingerprints in Slaying

Norfolk, Va., July 30 (AP).—Fresh impetus was given tonight to investigation of the hotel-room slaying of F. T. Jennings, of Augusta, Ga., salesman, when Norfolk police received permission to check fingerprints found in the room against those of marines stationed at the Norfolk Navy Yard.

Jennings, 49, member of a prominent South Carolina family, was found bludgeoned to death on his bed last Monday shortly after he had walked through the lobby with two men who, police were told, wore khaki uniforms.

Fumes Overcome Richard F. Roper Working on Car

Richard Fred Roper, 31, son of the Minister to Canada and former Secretary of Commerce, was found unconscious in the garage at his home, 3025 Woodland drive, early last night. He had been accidentally overcome by carbon monoxide gas.

Members of the rescue squad, which revived Roper, said he apparently had been working on his automobile. The car was on a jack. He was taken to a hospital.

Roper is the brother of Lieut. Comdr. John W. Roper, U. S. N.

Revived by a fire rescue squad, Roper was rushed to Emergency Hospital, where Dr. Mathew W. Perry said he was in good condition. His wife, Mrs. Monte B. Roper, told police he had jacked up the automobile to repair a tire and apparently had left the engine running. It had stopped when he was discovered lying on the garage floor by his 7-year-old son, Richard, jr.

His father, who lives in the same block of Woodland drive, is in Otawa. A brother, iLeut. Comdr. John W. Roper, U. S. N., is on duty at the Navay Academy.

News of Capital Night Clubs

By Mary Harris

PICCOLO OR TIRE PUMP? If Chet de Chastain, leader of Metronome's Penguins, ever has a flat tire, he can inflate it with his new "flute"—if his wind holds out. This alleged flute is a length of small tin pipe with holes punched in it. Attached to one end is a couple of feet of rubber hose that Maestro Chastain drapes around his neck and blows into while he fingers the pipe a la flute. The incomprehensible thing is that he really gets music out of the contraption. He prefers to render (or rend) "I Love to Play the Piccolo" on it.

SWITCHIN' AROUND. The Cocomo Trio will move up from the Hour Glass to the King Cole Room this week. And singer Arthur Todd and Evelyn Knight, with Tommy Johnson at the piano, are scampering from the K. C. R. to the Hour Glass.

FLOOR SHOW AGENDA. Shoreham Terrace. Gary and Leon in English, Spanish, Scottish and Cuban dances. What, no Jugoslavic stepping? Key Taylor, "baby face beauty" and dancer. Goodrich and Nelson in "feats of equilibrium."

Lotus. The "Abdallah Girls" revue, also dancers Healy and Evans. Songs by Buddy Shaner and bright dance music by Bill Strickland's Orchestra.

Bamboo Gardens. The "Summertime Revue" with a celestial flavor given by Manager Huey Liang's Chinese songs.

SEARCH FOR STARS. Every night at the Brown Derby Al Simmonds goes looking for stars with a flash light. Time and again Al finds big stars as well as amateur stars, for visiting theatrical folks often step up to the mike and unwind hot songs. But the amateurs are great fun, too. If you perform at the Brown Derby, Al will give you a recording of the stunt.

TRUMPET BLOWING. Steve Le Sieur blows his own trumpet(er). He says that Charlie Frankhauser, of the Le Sieur Orchestra on the Roger Smith roof, is the finest trumpeter in these parts. Charlie used to be with the Krupa and Goodman bands. For a fine example of his work, listen to his lead in "Night Must Fall," the radio theme song on the R. S. roof broadcast.

WILLIAM REMEMBERS. Customers telephoning reservations at the Lounge Riviera continually are astounded by being addressed by name as soon as they start to speak. It is because cordial Head Waiter William has an uncanny faculty of remembering voices. P. S. Better than that, William remembers every one's favorite drink, too.

"TINY'S" PECCADILLOES. "Tiny Hill, whose 12-piece orchestra opens at Glen Echo today, likes Hill Billy music, believes in hunches and follows em through. His hobby is making salads, but he never eats them. There's probably a reason.

YOGI LADY. Maryland Gardens' seeress, the Countess de Bournat, studied yogi for two years at Calcutta. Her palmistry instruction was absorbed from the famed Cheiro, of Paris.

MUSICIANS' SAY. Jack Manning, of the Hi Hat, compliments Washington by vowing that the townsfolk's requests for special numbers reflect a much higher musical taste than that of other cities.

Dolice Scott, leader of the Neptune Room's Four Girls of Note, promises they'll soon stage a drum and bass specialty, "Big Noise From Winnetka."

Milton Davis, of the Rainbow Room, asserts that the new "Cinderella, Stay in My Arms," will soon top the hit number line-up.

Marty Rubin (O'Donnell's Farms) enjoys reminiscing, but naturally, about the White House parties where he sung his snappy ditties.

Dick Ashby, owner of Dick's Grill, can tell you some good yarns about the days when he played trombone with Jan Garber, but he prefers to talk about those Smithfield hams he's having cured in a very special manner.

CIRCUS NIGHT was on at Mayfair lately when a flock of show people blew in after their last performance. There was dancing in the aisles to Art Baker's music, a volunteer emcee with a false moustache, a take-off on "Romeo and Juliet," with the back of one of the big semicircular seats figuring as a balcony. Onlookers vowed the show was more fun than the preceding theater performance.

HUEY LIANG,
who will sing Chinese songs at the Bamboo Gardens this week. The two-in-one portrait at top shows Gary Leon and Tut Mace, now starring on the Shoreham Terrace

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The fabulous Rice family including Dorothy, wife of P. Hal Sims and an artist, sculptor, aviator and inventor of psychic bidding, and her daring sister, Mrs. Marion Rice Hart, who recently anchored in New York Harbor after piloting her sailing ship around the world, boasts of another talented member. The younger brother, Julian, until recently has been eclipsed by the brilliance of his relatives but despite the fame of his bridge-expert brother-in-law and despite the psychological coups of his sister Dorothy, Julian has worked up to being a contract authority in his own right.

Today's hand, played by Julian in a duplicate tournament, looks like one of Dorothy's psychic tricks, but the strategy employed in this coup was in passing with a bid rather than bidding with a pass, in which Mrs. Sims, as one of the world's poorest cardholders, specializes.

Julian, although he had an impulse to overcall with a spade, refrained from doing so, realizing that if he bid spades he might drive the adversaries into a minor game contract which they would make. If the adversaries proved coy or it developed that they held little strength, he could come in with a spade bid on the next round.

After a heart bid by East, West, not unnaturally, called no trump, and East, not unnaturally supported. Julian led out his five top spades, and thereafter rested comfortably except for making sure his partner did not revoke. The ensuing dissertation by the unfortunate declarers proved warm and lengthy.

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	1 ♠	2 ♡	Pass
3 ◇	Pass	4 ◇	Pass

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Scheduled to continue in harness until September 15, Col. Charles I. Stengle, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, is outlining a "rest" program for himself after he turns over the reigns of A. F. G. E. to his successor. Stengle, who recently announced that he would not be a candidate for re-election, wants to get out of town for a good vacation before he takes up new business.

"Just because I won't be carrying on my old job," says Stengle, "doesn't mean that I won't be continuing on in the same lines." Not choosing to be specific about it at this time, Stengle intends to keep concentrating on Federal employe legislation.

Planting one tree a minute sounds like Arbor Day in high gear. It's the record of the crews working under the Prarie States forestry service of the Department of Agriculture. It's estimated that more than 42,000,000 trees have been put in the ground at this rate since the beginning of the year.

Some of the gold star crews averaged 105 trees per hour per man during the whole day. That record would make even a stopwatch tired keeping track of it.

Field workers of the Government's grazing division are living in apartments on wheels. Their trailers are fully equipped with sleeping quarters, kitchen and offices. Under the new arrangement, they don't have to retrace hundreds of miles in order to return to central bases to make their reports. They make them up as they go along.

The trailer arrangement also gives them an opportunity to make a better study of wildlife conditions in the areas they cover on their trips. Some of their routes cover stretches of land more extensive than the entire acreage of the State of Connecticut.

Ultimately intended for the files of the National Archives, microfilm copies of documents proving the ownership of Thomas Lincoln's farm at Hodgenville, Ky., are being used by National Park Service research technicians in connection with projects at Abraham Lincoln National Park.

The old idea that "honest Abe's" family was a poor one is thrown out by the court records, photographed on microfilm, which show that the older Lincoln paid $200 for the homestead in Kentucky, where his famous son was born.

Musings in the shade: That display of fur coats in the lobby of the Department of Commerce Building looked pretty much out of place about a week ago. But now with fur sales on F street, it seems right up to date . . . That brass buffalo on the floor of Interior's lobby is much more ferocious than the buffalo on the chromium lights out in front of the Department of Justice . . . but the bisons at Justice are dead ringers for the ones that prowl on the old-fashioned nickel.

It won't be until August 1 that Federal WPA art project workers finally get moved into their new quarters near the Walker-Johnson Building at 1734 New York avenue. Most of the 160 to be transferred have desk space in the Ouray Building at Eighth and G streets. Recent curtailment in staff has made the Ouray location too large for those still on the pay rolls. Artists, writers, musicians and members of the historical records survey will be given offices in Temporary Building No. 2, the Lemon Building, and the Washington Auditorium.

Since Eli Whitney thought up the cotton gin, 145 cotton crops have been harvested. Today, according to a farmers' bulletin, put out by the United States Department of Agriculture, a gin is actually a whole plant of gins with dozens of the machines in a row. The factory is equipped with cotton-cleaning and fur-extracting equipment besides. There are 12,000 now in operation.

You wouldn't think it of coyotes, but they're music lovers . . . at least they are in Yellowstone Park.

Rangers recently indulging in some campfire singing were joined in by a chorus of the coyotes more than a mile away. Some of the rangers, according to the Department of the Interior item, "have offered the theory that coyote ears are particularly sensitive to disharmony so that the wailing is set up to counteract the effect produced by the campfire meetings."

Something to think of when you're on that Sunday afternoon drive: Sixty-eight per cent of motor vehicles all over the world are right here in the United States.

Hawaii and New Zealand follow the United States with most vehicles per capita but the United Kingdom comes second with the next largest general percentage.

Another report from the Department of Commerce on the international scene carries the interesting information that in spite of the trouble in China, more Japanese went to movies this year than last.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

CHAPTER LV.

PENNY SAID, "Looks like he's got a ticket to Jacksonville."

Bear and dogs were out of sight and hearing. The trail was still plain to Penny's eyes. A broken bough, a bent clump of grasses, unrolled a map before him even where the ground was hard and showed no foot-prints. In late morning they were winded and had to stop to rest. Penny cupped his ear into the light icy wind that had risen.

M. K. Rawlings

"Now I think I hear old Julia," he said. "At the bay."

The impetus sent them forward again. At high noon they came up with the quarry. He had decided, at long last, to stop and fight it out. The dogs had him at bay. He swayed sideways on his thick short legs, growling and baring his teeth. His ears were laid flat in his fury. When he turned his back for further retreat, Julia nipped at his flanks and Rip rounded him to spring for his shaggy throat. He slashed at them with great curved claws. He backed away. Rip swung behind him and sunk his teeth in a leg. Slewfoot squealed shrilly. He wheeled with the swiftness of a hawk and raked the bulldog to him. He caught him up in his forepaws. Rip yelped in pain, then fought gamely to keep the jaws above him from closing on his backbone. The two heads tossed back and forth, snarling and snapping, each trying for the other's throat while protecting his own. Penny lifted his gun. He took steady aim and fired. With Rip hugged to his breast, old Slewfoot dropped. His killing days were done.

It seemed so easy now that it was over. They had followed him. Penny had shot him. There he lay——

They looked wonderingly at each other. They approached the prone carcass. Jody was weak in the knees. Penny's walk was unsteady. Jody felt a clear lightness fill him, as though he were a balloon.

Penny said, "I declare, I believe I'm surprised."

He slapped Jody on the back and cut a buck-and-wing.

He screeched, "Yippee!"

The sound echoed through the swamp. A jay-bird screeched after him and flew away. Jody took up his excitement and shrilled "Yippee!" Old Julia crouched and barked with them. Rip, licking his wounds, wagged his stumpy tail.

Penny shouted tunelessly,

"My name is Sam.
I don't give a damn.
I'd ruther be a nigger
Than a pore white man."

He pounded Jody again.

"Who's a pore white man?"

Jody shouted, "We ain't pore. We got ol' Slewfoot."

THEY CAPERED together and shouted and yipped until their throats were hoarse and the squirrels were chattering all about them. They were at least relieved. Penny laughed breathlessly.

"I ain't whooped and hollered that-a-way, I don't know when. I'll swear, it done me good."

Jody's exuberance was still on him and he whooped again. Penny sobered an leaned to examine the bear. He would weigh 500 pounds. His hide was magnificent. Penny lifted up the huge front paw with its missing toe.

He said, "Well, old fellow, you was a mighty mean enemy, but you got my respect."

He sat down victoriously on the stout ribs. Jody touched the thick fur.

Penny said, "Now we got to do a piece o' studyin'. Here we be in the middle o' nowhere, with a thing bigger'n you and me and your Ma put together, and the cow throwed in."

He took out his pipe and filled and lighted it leisurely.

"Jest as good to study comfortable," he said.

He was in such spirits that the problem which seemed insoluble to Jody, was no more to him than a pleasant challenge. He began to figure, half to himself.

"Let's see, now. We'd ought to be jest about between Bear Spring and the river. The Fort Gates road to the west—the river to the east. Now kin we git the black gentleman here to Horse Landin'—there's boats passin' all the time—Well, we'll git him gutted and figger some more."

It was like turning a wagon-load of sacks of meal all at once, to turn him over on his back. The thick layers of fat under the hide made him roly-poly and flabby. He would not stay firmly when held.

"Jest as ornery dead as alive," Penny said.

He disemboweled the carcass neatly. Old Slewfoot was as trim and harmless as a whole beef hanging in a butcher shop. Jody tingled, holding out the heavy legs so that Penny could get at his work. He had never thought to see the day when he would hold the huge paws in his small ones. He had had no share in the hunt except to follow his father's small inexorable back, but now he felt strong and mighty.

Penny said, "Now we'll see be we men enough to budge him."

EACH TOOK a fore-paw and strained ahead. The effort needed to move the dead weight was prodigious. By heaving and jerking it was possible to pull it a foot at a time.

"We'll not git to the river by spring, this-a-way," Penny said, "and starve to death on the way to boot."

The inability to keep a firm grip on the smooth-haired paws was the greatest bar to their progress. Penny sat on his heels and pondered.

He said at last "We kin walk on to Fort Gates and git he'p. That'll cost us a good share o' the meat but hit'll spare our own gizzards. Or else we kin rig up a kind of a pullin' harness and fight it out to the river. And mebbe tear our very hearts out. Or we kin make it on in home and git the wagon."

"But the wagon'll not be there, Pa. Ma'll be done gone to the doin's."

"Now you know I plumb forgot 'twas Christmas Eve day."

Penny pushed back his cap and scratched his head.

"Well, come on, boy."

"Where we goin'?"

"Fort Gates."

The road leading to the small settlement on the river was a scant 2 miles to the west, as Penny had been certain. It was good to turn from the swamp and the scrub to the open sandy road. A cold wind blew down it but the sun was beneficent. Penny found a patch of cancer-weed by the roadside and broke the stems and let the healing sap drip on Rip's wounds. He was talkative, and as they walked on he brought out from his half-forgotten lore tales of other bear hunts, long ago.

Penny said, "When I were about your size, my uncle Miles come visitin' from Georgia. And a cold day about like this he takened me in the very swamp we come through today. We was moseyin' along, not lookin' for nothin' in pertickler, and on beyond us we seed what looked like a buzzard settin' on a stump, packin' at somethin'. Well, we got there and what do you suppose 'twas?"

"'Twasn't no buzzard a-tall. 'Twas a bear cub cuffin' playful-like at his twin on the ground below him.

"My uncle Miles said, 'Now we'll jest ketch us a bear cub.' They was right gentle and he goes up to the one on the stump and ketched it. Well, when he'd ketched it, he didn't have nary thing to tote it in. And them scaper's'll gnaw on you if they ain't in a sack. Well, them up-country folks wears underwear in the winter. He takened off his breeches and he takened off his long drawers and he tied knots in the legs of 'em and he made him a sack. He puttened the cub in it and about the time he reached for his breeches to put 'em back on agin, here come a crashin' and a wooffin' and a stompin' in the bresh, and the old she-bear come outen the thick right at him. Well, he takened out through the swamp and dropped the cub and the mammy gathered it up, drawers and all. But she were so clost behind him she stepped on a vine and it tripped him and throwed him flat amongst the thorns and brambles. And Aunt Moll was a muddle-minded kind o' woman and she couldn't never make it out how he come home without his drawers on a cold day, and his bottom scratched. But Uncle Miles allus said that wasn't nothin' to the puzzlin' the mammy bear must o' done over them drawers on her young un."

JODY LAUGHED until he could laugh no more.

He complained, "Pa, you got all them tales in your mind and you don't tell 'em."

"Well, it takes a thing like bein' in the swamp where it happened, to call it back to me. Now in that same swamp, one very cold March, I remember comin' on another pair o' bear cubs. They was whimperin' with the cold. New-borned cubs is no bigger'n rats and plumb naked, and these uns hadn't yit growed much fur. They was huddled up in a red bay thicket and cryin' like human babies. Listen!"

The sound of hoof beats was unmistakable along the road behind them.

"Now wouldn't it be fine not to have to go clare to Fort Gates for he'p?"

The sounds came closer. They stepped to the side of the road. The riders were the Forresters.

Penny said, "Looks like I miscalled myself."

Buck led the cavalcade. They streamed down the road. They were drunk as lords. They reined in.

"Now look at this! Ol' Penny Baxter and his he-cub! Hey, Penny! What the devil you doin' up here?"

Penny said, "I been on a hunt. And this un was deliberate. Me and Jody takened out after ol' Slewfoot."

"Whoops! On foot? Listen to that, boys! That's better'n a pair o' biddies rompin' on a hawk."

"And we got him," Penny said.

Buck shook himself. The whole array seemed to sober.

"Don't tell me none o' them tales. Where's he at?"

"'Bout 2 miles to the east, between Bear Spring and the river."

"Reckon he is. He fools around there a good bit."

"He's dead. How I know he's dead, I gutted him. Me and Jody's walkin' to Fort Gates for he'p in totin' him outen the swamp."

Buck stiffened in a drunken dignity.

"You goin' to Fort Gates for he'p gittin' out ol' Slewfoot? And the best slew-footers in the county right here beside you?"

Just Social Order Urged By Mgr. Haas

Economic Difficulties Bring Dictatorships, Educator Asserts

Education must fight for a just social order in which men will not be tempted to barter their liberties for bread, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Francis J. Haas, dean of the school of social science at Catholic University, last night told a summer session audience in McMahon Hall Auditorium.

A new civilization, new life purposes and new rewards, he said, call upon education to cease to be a "limping follower of events" and to become a leader.

Speaking on "Catholic Education and the Social Sciences" in the Catholic University's series of golden jubilee lectures, Mgr. Haas told his audience the governmental obliteration of individual rights in Europe is economic in origin. He asked whether the American people, under similar economic injustice, "would be less likely to adopt similar measures."

Consumption Necessary

"Our immediate economic task," he said, "is not so much to get goods produced as to get produced goods into the hands of the great mass of our population. This can be done through a fairly simple device. Provide all industrious citizens, able and willing to work, with adequate buying power. To do this, however, we must first undo the evils caused by long years of short-sighted social and economic policy.

"Revolutions come in great nations," Mgr. Haas insisted, "only when the living conditions of great masses become intolerable." Those nations of Europe, he declared, which since 1919 "have suffered most from human miseries arising out of insufferable economic conditions" have turned into totalarian states.

This problem he said, "goes back at least three centuries to the rise of individualism, which asserted that self-interest, uncontrolled and unfettered, must rule society.'

Unemployed Must Be Aided

Indifference to the plight of the unemployed must not continue, Mgr. Haas warned. "Between 8,000,000 and 11,000,000 American citizens are ready and willing to work but are denied the opportunity," he said, pointing out that if they are "driven to desperation," they will fall in "with the modern trend toward totalitarianism, which, as bitter experience shows, is less a cure than it is another disease."

"As individuals, men know and fear this danger," he said, asserting there has been "no widespread, determined, organized public opposition to meet and defeat this impending and appalling concentration" of power in the hands of dictators.

"Can it be denied," he asked, "that the organization of this opposition and the instruction of mankind in the ways and means to establish a just social order and thereby anticipate unwarranted concentration is an authentic task, if not a central purpose, of education?"

Dr. Haas, formerly a member of the Wisconsin Labor Relations Board and now adviser to the Labor Department's Conciliation Board, charged that "American industrialists, by opposing labor organizations, have excluded an enormously important part of the Nation's intelligence from the policy making of the Nation."

Quotes Andrew Carnegie

"To date," Dr. Haas pointed out, "less than one out of five workers in cities, and less than one out of ten workers on farms, have won recognition" of the right to organize and choose representatives to deal for them. He quoted Andrew Carnegie, "who was later to repudiate his early position by his record in the homestead strike," as having pointed out 53 years ago that the power of the "ignorant demagogue arises chiefly from the lack of proper organizations among the men through which their real voice can be expressed."

Dr. Haas praised the work of the Catholic University, which upon the opening of its golden jubilee initiated a program at the direction of Pope Pius XI for teaching "Christian democracy in the Catholic schools of the Nation." About 10,000 schools, containing about 3,000,000 students, are in this program. Preparation of expanded texts now is going forward at Catholic University.

Education, Dr. Haas emphasized, means more than instruction in schools alone. It includes, he said, five agencies: the family, the school, the church, the government and occupation. However, he said he believed educators should harmonize these agencies into a single unifying force.

Silt Ruining Burnt Mills Reservoir

U. S. Agency Finds Erosion Is Filling Water Source

The Burnt Mills reservoir near Silver Spring, Md., "will be ruined as a water supply within the next nine years" owing to its present heavy rate of silting, the Soil Conservation Service reported yesterday.

Government investigators have found that the $95,000 reservoir, in a narrow shallow gorge on the northwest branch of the Anacostia River, has one of the highest rates of storage depletion of 80 reservoirs throughout the country. Since its completion in May, 1930, its storage capacity has been reduced by 47 per cent, from 55,000,000 gallons to about 30,000,000, investigators found.

Clew to the rapid rate of silting is in the surrounding farm land, the service said. Half of the drainage area is under cultivation and one-fourth is in pasture or idle.

"There is evidence of sheet erosion on virtually every acre. Many fields have lost so much fertile topsoil that they have been allowed to revert to a cover of weeds and other inferior vegetation," the report said.

The chief need of the watershed, the report declared, is an erosion control program, involving contour cultivation, pasture improvement and reforestation of steep slopes.

Flock Is Urged to Take God for Granted

In times of hate, suspicion and international tension such as these, serious-minded men find themselves "driven back from the secondary matters of religion to the most fundamental principles," the Rev. Alvin L. Wills, rector of the Episcopal Church of Our Saviour, Brookland, said yesterday at the people's evensong service in Washington Cathedral.

Mr. Wills told his audience that it would be a great gain if the American people had the practical moral attitude of the First Century Jews "who took God for granted and tried to come into fellowship with him."

He attacked the attitude of those who "have developed the habit of not taking any formulated truth for granted, of accepting nothing they cannot prove."

"I suppose," Mr. Wills said, "there is no divergence of opinion as to what is the first commandment, namely, supreme love for God and a concomitant faith in Him. But such a faith is not easy to hold, and never was. There are hindrances to such a faith even in the minds of many who want to believe but find it difficult. But there are also strong facts on the other side that make such a conviction hard for these same people to give up without a feeling of wistfulness."

Listing the hindrances to faith, Mr. Wills said that the first is God's invisibility. Yet, he said, "we too are invisible, as invisible as God, but we do not for that reason stop believing in our own existence, or that of others."

Many people worry about the problem of why God lets men suffer, he said, and he answered this doubt by saying "We must take the bitter with the sweet."

It is important, he said, never to allow intellectual pride to deify human reason to the point where men will accept nothing that cannot be proved by experiment. "Even the scientist," he said, "must finally take the 'leap of faith,' for the reason that he could not in many lifetimes examine all the phenomena in any single classification."

He said that the "final test" for a belief in God, one which "has no rebuttal," is for the individual to try living according to Christian doctrine, and test its truth by experience.
